Camel

An honest cigarette honestly advertised

Delightful tobaccos, the choicest grown. Blended with skill and care. Sold without bunk of any kind, and it leads the world by billions.

If all cigarettes were as good as Camel you wouldn't hear anything about special treatments to make cigarettes good for the throat. Nothing takes the place of choice tobaccos.

Almost a Country Lass

Miss E., a public school nurse, was beginning the regular health examination of a flaxen-haired girl in the first grade.

Instead of using the word "born," sometimes puzzling to the youngsters, Miss E. asked: "Have you always lived in Indianapolis?"

"Yes," replied the little girl. "But before I came from heaven my mother lived in the country."—Indianapolis News.

Clean Kidneys By Drinking Lots of Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys If Bladder Bothers or Back Hurts

Eating too much rich food may produce kidney trouble in some form, says a well-known authority, because the acids created excite the kidneys. Then they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, begin drinking lots of good water and also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity; also to neutralize the acids in the system so that they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus often avoiding serious kidney disorders.

Unable to See Into Newton's Giant Mind

While Isaac Newton was making a study of the refraction of light upon thin plates, as exemplified in the soap bubble, a neighbor woman who saw him experimenting mistook him for a trifler. "He diverts himself in the oddest ways imaginable," she said. "Every morning when the sun shines so brightly that we are obliged to draw the window blinds, he takes his seat in front of a tub of soap sunds, and occupies himself for hours blowing soap bubbles through a common clay pipe and intently watching them till they burst."

Newton's acquaintances testified to his self-forgetfulness and humility. "I do not know," he said of himself, "how I may appear to the world, but to myself I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the seashore, now and then finding a smoother pebble or a prettier shell than before, while the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me."—Kansas City Times.

HOW SWINDLERS MARK THEIR PREY

By W. R. MOREHOUSE
Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association

IN the field of fake investments suckers are graded according to their reaction to the appeal of glittering schemes. A name or a sucker list of investors may have a valuation anywhere from zero to $100.

W. R. MOREHOUSE.

If your name is on the list and it is known that you invariably "Investigate Before you Invest," your name is checked to indicate that you are too hard to sell to be worth cultivating further, but if you invest first and investigate afterward, your name is checked to indicate that you are easily swindled and for this reason your name is worth $100,—not to you, but to the owner of the list, for the names of those who invest without investigating are choice prospects and sell readily to promoters.

Certain names on a sucker list are checked to indicate "easy picking," and by this is meant that in addition to being ignorant on investments, those checked are not disposed to ask advice of their banker but go ahead and invest in anything from gold bricks to stock in some proposed company for the exploration of diamond fields on Mars.

Those whose names are listed are what might be called marked investors—investors who have been marked for slaughter—investors who have been marked to have their savings taken from them by unwarranted promises of fabulous riches.

If your name is on the sucker list and you are receiving "wild-cat" literature, be on your guard, for not only one but a whole tribe of "wild-cat" promoters are hot on your trail. If you are skeptical as to the extent to which they will go in order to sell you an interest in their fake schemes the following should prove illuminating, as it itemizes the literature and stationery sent to each name on a certain sucker list of investors. This literature was mailed in 91 different mailings. Each person received:

22 two-page letters
6 three-page letters
2 four-page letters
52 fake newspapers containing fake write-ups
39 pieces of highly lurid prospectus material
34 return addressed postal cards
72 subscription blanks

making a total of 363 pieces of literature weighing 11 pounds and costing approximately $50. In addition to this there were numerous telephone calls and personal interviews.

In reaching for more, you may lose what you have.

A person receiving a flood of literature calling attention to certain investment chances has a good reason for watching his step lest he weaken and invest and finally lose his savings. If you are receiving "wild-cat" investment literature it is a good indication that your name is on a sucker list and that it, with other names, is being sold to irresponsible promoters and consequently you may expect to continue to receive literature of the get-rich-quick variety from different sources. If you have ever invested in any one of the investments offered you may rest assured that you are "easy" and it is reasonably certain that as long as you live you will receive bunkum literature.

Some people are so foolish as to feel complimented that so much attention is shown them by men having investments to offer. The facts are instead of a compliment being paid them, it is a reflection on their ability to judge between a good investment and one of the bunkum variety

If you want to draw the attention of dealers in sucker lists and of promoters of various kinds, let it be known that you have a savings bank account or good securities and you will be the object of a very vigorous campaign to relieve you of those savings.

It is always well to remember that the irresponsible promoter specializes on swindling savings depositors, exchanging his fake investment for their bank account, which is always worth 100 cents on the dollar.

Of the numerous bait schemes used to swindle the public the trading of equities in real estate is among the most successful from the promoter's standpoint.

From the owner's standpoint a trade usually means getting into deeper water financially—going further into debt.

Here's how it works. If you have an equity in a piece of property which equity you would like to be relieved of, some promoter will offer to give you credit for your equity on the purchase price of another piece of property or on the purchase of certain hot air stocks.

In the first place, the swindler actually allows you nothing for your equity as he marks up the price of what he is selling you a like amount—with the result that you lose your equity on one hand and get yourself into a less desirable deal on the other.

Proceed slowly, if you are approached with a proposition to trade an equity. It may not be exactly what you prefer, but holding the equity is far ahead of holding the sack after some swindler has dealt with you.

CONTESTS AND BETTER FARMING

By D. H. OTIS
American Bankers Association

Much interest has been aroused over the country by ton pig litter contests. In a number of instances these litters have even exceeded two tons. If brood sows were developed so as to produce ton litters, it would be possible to obtain from each litter at least 1,500 pounds dressed meat, which would make it possible to cut down the number of brood sows from 9,000,000 to 6,000,000, a saving of 3,000,000 head.

Egg production per hen is today exceedingly low, amounting to only 56 eggs per year. Under the direction of the colleges of agriculture there have been carried on tests with demonstration farms which show it is easily possible to have flocks able to produce an average of 135 eggs per hen, or more than double the present production. If this were done throughout the United States, we could dispense with 239,000,000 hens, and still maintain the present production of eggs.

The importance and significance of quality production in our live stock is well illustrated in some figures taken from Wisconsin, where over 5,000 cows belonging to cow testing associations have made definite records. Results are shown in the following:

No. of Cows	Av. Lbs. Butterfat	Total Cost	Profit
1,111.....	203	$98.60	$ 33
1,476.....	250	107.00	16.00
1,226.....	298	115.00	32.00
747.....	346	125.00	47.00
333.....	396	132.00	65.00
122.....	445	146.00	78.00

It will be noticed that with each increase of about 50 pounds per cow of butterfat, there is an increase of $15 to $18 per cow in net profit.

The 250 pound cow, which produces $16 profit, represents 6 per cent interest on $266. The 445 pound cow producing $78 profit represents 6 per cent interest on $1,300. In other words, one 445 pound cow will produce as much net profit as five 250 pound cows. Any surplus in dairy products can readily be taken care of by simply eliminating unprofitable or low-producing cows.

The Simple Life in India

In India they have 50 different religions and every religion has its own meat. The Mohammedan will not eat pork, the Hindu will not eat beef, the Narpalies will eat neither beef or pork, but eat fish and chicken instead. They take a piece of cloth five yards long, and that is the limit of their clothes. The cloth is wound around the lower part of the body, and some who have a few rupees wear a shirt. They live in bamboo huts. They split bamboo and lace it crosswise, and sometimes they put a coat of mud over the outside. The roof is made of banana leaves and is a foot thick.

Gold-Plated Pagoda

The native of Burma is rated much higher than that of India in the matter of intelligence and the country is much pleasanter and more picturesque. There are many beautiful castles surrounded by gorgeous flower gardens and imposing pagodas. The largest pagoda in all Burma, known as the Swaddigondge, is located at Rangoon and is gold-plated from top to bottom, with a flag of diamonds and rubies at the top. It is said to have cost $5,000,000 and is a beautiful temple, where all Burmese can go to worship. It covers between 10 and 15 acres at the bottom.

HOW MOVIE STAR'S VALUE IS GAUGED

To those of us who marvel at the enormous salaries paid to movie stars and wonder how the popularity which justifies these salaries is gauged, an explanation is offered in an article by Frederick James Smith in Liberty. To the question: "How do producers know they have a film favorite?" the writer answers:

"There are numerous barometers. One is the mail coming addressed to the player at the studio. This may run to 500 letters a day. There are the requests for photographs, sent to the studios themselves. The photograph bill of a favorite is a huge one. There are the letters sent to the film-fan magazine. These fluctuate, according to the popularity of the player's latest picture. Actors have been known to try to create a phony popularity by having friends write enthusiastic letters about them to the fan publications.

"Another indicator of popularity is what the exhibitor reports to the film company and to the screen trade papers. Since Valentino went begging—and a dozen producers muffed a gold mine—the celluloid world has taken a lot more care in watching for box-office bets."

ABACUS STILL USED IN MANY COUNTRIES

Early Greeks made their mathematical calculations on a sanded floor or table, upon which parallel lines were marked with a stylus. On this first abacus the Greek youth was taught also to write. Later the abacus passed to the Romans and counters were run in grooves or strung on wires. In the latter form it reached the Orient, was carried by the invading Mongols into Russia in the Thirteenth century and also found its way to Persia. It reached America via the Chinese laundry. In all these countries and among their natives, wherever they may be, the abacus, in different forms, but the same in principle, is still in use. The Eleventh century saw the Arabic numerals and the decimal system introduced into Europe. This ended the use of the cumbersome Greek and Roman numerals. Mathematical operations were simplified and the way opened for the development of modern devices. John Napier, creator of logarithms, invented the now indispensable decimal point in 1617.—Edison Monthly.

Spicy Story

George Plympton, the scenario writer, loves to tell how he broke into the literary game. He was in New York at the time, and personally submitted his first offense to the editor. The editor took one look at the main title and said:

"I can tell by the name of your story that it won't do for us. Our magazine prints only spicy stories."

"Then this ought to be just the thing," insisted George. "It's a story about a cinnamon bear."

His Cure

"The falling leaves fill me with melancholy thoughts," said the poetic person.

"They used to have that effect on me," returned the prosy man.

"What changed you?"

"I moved into an apartment and don't have to rake them up any more."—Boston Transcript.

"Here! You can't ride on this ticket. It says New York to Chicago and you're going from Chicago to New York."

"Oh, that's all right—I'll ride backwards."

Make Believe

"What is that button for?"

"That's where I ring for the servants."

"What, have you servants?"

"No, but that's no reason why I shouldn't enjoy ringing for them!"

Optional

"Mother, I want to go to a co-educational college."

"But, my dear, isn't there a good deal of flirting?"

"Yes, but you don't have to take that course."

Jews as "Easterners"

The most common surname in the Holy land, according to a Hebrew directory just published, is Mizrachi (Easterner), the people who bear it equaling in number the Cohens and the Levys together.

SHE WENT FROM BAD TO WORSE

Down to 98 Pounds — Finally Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Cleveland, Ohio.—"After having my first baby, I lost weight, no matter what I did. Then a doctor told me I would be better if I had another baby, which I did. But I got worse, was always sickly and went down to 98 pounds. My neighbor told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it helped her very much, so I tried it. After taking four bottles, I weigh 116 pounds. It has just done wonders for me and I can do my housework now without one bit of trouble." —Mrs. M. Riessinger, 10004 Nelson Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

If some good fairy should appear, and offer to grant your heart's desire, what would you choose? Wealth? Happiness?

Health? That's the best gift. Health is riches that gold cannot buy and surely health is cause enough for happiness.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound may be the good fairy who offers you better health.

"The modern girl, I'm afraid, is extravagant," Mr. Barrhart went on. "A young bank clerk proposed to a modern girl the other night:

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Senator Curtis of Kansas Desires to Head the Republican Ticket.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WE NOW have one openly avowed candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination. Charles Curtis, United States senator from Kansas, has informed his friends in that state—and the public at large—that he will be pleased to be the candidate of the Kansas delegation, and with the announcement comes evidence that he is going after the nomination in dead earnest. He believes that he adequately represents the interests of the great West and that as a conservative who, nevertheless, is liberal on many issues, he will be acceptable to the rest of the country.

Senator Curtis came to his decision after President Coolidge had scolded Senator Fess for the latter's insistence on a third term for the present incumbent. This incident convinced the Kansas senator that Mr. Coolidge really would not consent to be drafted and therefore he sent to his boomers a letter in which he said:

"Having served in the house and senate for more than 35 years, I know the great responsibility of the Presidency and the arduous duties of the office. Nevertheless if my friends of Kansas desire to send a delegation to the next Republican national convention favorable to my nomination, I shall be greatly pleased to be their candidate. However, I will not consent to become a candidate if the delegation is to be selected with a view of voting for me for a few ballots as a 'favorite son.' As I stated when the question was first to be put to me, 'I will not allow myself to be used as a stalking horse for anyone.'"

Already there are Curtis for President clubs in every county in Kansas, and the movement in his favor has many followers in Missouri and Oklahoma. He will have the solid Kansas delegation back of him, and in Washington it is considered that even if he does not get first place on the ticket he will be in position to do effective trading that may get him the vice presidential nomination.

Growth of the Norris boom, which is fostered by the radical Republicans and supported by Senator Borah, is admittedly hurting Lowden's prospects in the West.

DETROIT has been enjoying a spectacular mayoralty campaign that has attracted the attention of the whole country. Mayor John W. Smith, candidate for re-election, is an avowed wet and declares prohibition never can be enforced and is the greatest force for evil in America today. If he is re-elected, a liberal policy will continue in Detroit, and many of the city's big business men support him because, they assert, that policy has greatly benefited the city, especially in the way of attracting hundreds of national conventions. Opposing Smith is John C. Lodge, candidate of the drys, who has been president of the city council and before that a member of the legislature and a newspaper man. He declined to do any campaigning and says little or nothing on the subject of prohibition.

CAROL, former crown prince of Rumania, decided that perhaps he should be placed on the throne and so wrote a bunch of letters to his leading supporters and Rumanian politicians stating his position. These were entrusted to M. Manoilescu, former undersecretary of state, who was arrested with the documents in his possession. Determined to suppress any movement to enthrone Carol, the government grabbed hundreds of his friends in various parts of the country, and put Rumania under martial law with large bodies of troops placed in strategical positions and a strict censorship established. Premier Bratiano announced that the plot had been entirely squelched, but at this writing the news that is seeping across the border indicates that the Carol movement is assuming more alarming proportions. Opponents of the government in Bukharest were said to be greatly aroused, especially after it was reported that Bratiano intended to arrest Juliu Manin, leader of the national peasant party.

General Avarescu, once the ally of Bratiano but now his enemy, is credited with starting this Carolist movement. The prince is at St. Malo on the French seacoast. Recently he ostentatiously separated from Magda Lupescu, for whom he deserted his wife. It is said that among the seized letters was one from Magda to her parents saying the announcement of her break with "a dear friend" was a formality only.

EIGHTY miles off the Brazilian coast opposite Porto Segura, the boilers of the Italian liner Principessa Mafalda, from Genoa to Rio de Janeiro, exploded and the vessel went to the bottom in less than four hours. Fortunately the sea was calm and the steamer's radio calls for help brought several other steamships to the rescue, so that of the 990 passengers and crew of 240 all but 68 were saved. Most of the passengers were Italian emigrants who were celebrating their arrival when the accident occurred. The captain and crew are credited with great heroism and coolness in preventing a panic and getting many of their charges launched in lifeboats. The French liner Formosa was the first ship to arrive in response to the S. O. S. call, and her commander's daring exploit in maneuvering close to the Mafalda and taking 110 persons from her decks before she sank was hailed by the survivors as being one of the great deeds in the annals of the sea.

COLORADO'S coal mine strike, which is managed by the Industrial Workers of the World, is becoming more serious. Two of the state's largest coal fields are closed and new mines are involved daily. The leaders persist in picketing mines despite the law and court injunctions and up to this time they have done this peaceably, though they threaten to "march through the state with cannon" if any of their pickets are killed. Governor Adams says the strikers are violating the state law which prescribes that thirty days' notice shall be given before a walkout, and he will not deal with the members of the I. W. W. which Colorado does not recognize as a bona fide labor organization. The governor, however, has declined so far to send troops into the field, stating that the county officials must preserve order until they are ready to admit that they are unable to do so. The people of Colorado fear a repetition of the civil warfare that swept the state in 1913 and 1914, culminating in the battle of Ludlow. The miners demand a wage increase from $5.50 a day to $8.50, an eight-hour day and a five-day week.

REAR ADMIRAL MAGRUDER, who was so presumptuous as to criticize the management of the navy in a magazine article, was relieved of his command at Philadelphia by Secretary of the Navy Wilbur and ordered to report to Washington because he had "talked too much" since the publication of that article. "I do not feel," the secretary said, "that the secretary of the navy should be compelled to get information from naval officers concerning plans for the navy organization by obtaining newspapers or magazines in which such information is published. Such officers are paid by the government to render this service to the people and such information should be presented to regularly constituted authority by appropriate channels."

Admiral Magruder sent to President Coolidge a letter asking for a revocation of the order detaching him from duty at Philadelphia, but the chief executive declined to interfere or to see the admiral.

FALL and Sinclair won a point in their trial in Washington for conspiracy to defraud the government when the court ruled out the testimony given in the senate oil inquiry. Much of the evidence last week was concerned with the Liberty bond payments allegedly made to Fall by Sinclair. Though unable to connect Sinclair directly with this transaction, the government sought to prove that he was interested in the Continental Trading Company, Ltd., of Canada; that with profits from this concern $300,000 in Liberty bonds were purchased, $200,500 of which went to M. T. Everhart, Fall's son-in-law, and that Everhart with part of this paid off debts of companies in which Fall was interested, and turned over bonds valued at $90,000 to Fall direct.

A volume of evidence to support the government's contention that deception and secrecy surrounded the Fall-Sinclair transaction was laid before the jury. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., assistant secretary of the navy at the time the lease was signed, detailed what he understood to be the policy of the navy on the disposition of the oil reserves. He declared he did not learn that the entire Teapot Dome area was to be opened by leasing until some time after the Fall-Sinclair negotiations were consummated. His understanding was that only offset wells were to be drilled.

THURSDAY, the birthday of Theodore Roosevelt, was celebrated throughout the country as navy day. Naval vessels, navy yards and stations were all open and many navy officials delivered addresses. The keynote of the day was "Develop American sea power and merchant marine."

DWIGHT MORROW, our new ambassador to Mexico, arrived in Mexico City and was warmly greeted by Mexican and American residents alike, all of whom feel that he will go far toward ending the uncomfortable relations existing between the two nations. On Saturday President Calles formally received Mr. Morrow in the great hall of ambassadors and by his order there were present the entire cabinet, members of the foreign relations department and all military officers not on duty elsewhere. The American Chamber of Commerce, the American club and many leading business men also attended.

FIFTEEN universities in the United States are openly teaching socialist beliefs, while proponents of communism and internationalism are using the Federal Council of Churches, the Y. M. C. A., the League of Women Voters and college organizations to foster distrust of the government, according to Fred Marvin of New York. He made this statement in an address before the annual convention of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States in Milwaukee.

"Those engaged in subversive work against the government are using the Y. M. C. A. with great effect to further their ends," Mr. Marvin declared. "The leaders in this work are secretaries of the organization who were in Russia during the revolution. While this is being done without the consent or knowledge of the great bulk of men and women who support the organization, the proponents of communism are in executive positions and are having their own way.

Relative to the League of Women Voters and the Federal Council of Churches, Mr. Marvin said: "These are high-class organizations formed by high-minded persons, but in some localities they have been misled into supporting the policies of the subversive forces. The Y. M. C. A. and the Federal Council of Churches are innocently led to support those who seek to destroy the government in the belief that the propaganda is tending to advance the teachings of Christ and promoting world peace."

BANKERS of the United States, at their annual convention in Houston, Texas, devoted a lot of attention to flood control and agricultural relief, on both of which they urged legislation. Thomas Ross Preston of Chattanooga, Tenn., was elected president.

Mayor Thompson of Chicago, who has been ballyhooing about flood control, received a letter from Representative Cole of Iowa asking him not to "make vaudeville stuff" out of efforts to solve the Mississippi river problem. What assistance the congressmen are in need of, Mr. Cole said, ought to be supplied by scientists and engineers, "and not by mass meetings assembled by running excursion trains." He added that brass bands or big sticks would not be needed by the house in considering the subject.

AMOS PLEADS FOR JUSTICE

LESSON TEXT—Amos 5:1-27.

GOLDEN TEXT—Let judgment run down as waters and righteousness as a mighty stream.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Treating Everybody Right.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Kind of Man God Hears.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Squaring for God Against the Crowd.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Conditions of Divine Approval.

I. Israel's Desolation Predicted (vv. 1-3).

Amos lamented over the doom which was to overtake the nation. Israel is called a virgin because she had never been subdued by any foreign nation (see Isa. 23:12). Her falling to rise no more sets forth the utter desolation and helplessness to which the Assyrians subjected the nation. From this captivity Israel never returned. Those who came back from the Babylonian captivity were largely from Egypt.

II. The Call to Return to God.

God through the prophet says, "seek ye me and ye shall live." The implication is that while the divine judgments are not executed, an opportunity is offered for them to turn to God. In their turning to God they were to renounce:

1. Idolatry (vv. 5, 6).

They were to turn away from the places of idolatry—Bethel, Gilgal and Beersheba. God's judgment was to strike these places.

If they would not come to Him for life He would be their destroyer. "Our God is a consuming fire." The only one who can give life to those who seek Him is the one who shall destroy.

2. Cease to pervert judgment (v. 7).

"Turn judgment to wormwood" implies the bitterness of the perversion of justice to the injured.

3. Cease to dethrone righteousness.

"Leaving off righteousness" is thought to mean that unrighteousness was allowed to take its place. In this third exhortation the Lord's name is given with the following statement of some of His works:

1. "Maketh the seven stars and Orion;" 2. "Turneth the shadow of death into morning;" 3. "Maketh the day dark with night;" 4. "Calleth for the waters of the sea and poureth them out upon the earth," both in rain and deluge; 5. "Strengthened the spoil against the strong."

III. The Sins Committed by the Wicked Nation (vv. 10-13).

1. They hated the judge who condemned their wicked practices (v. 10).

2. They abhorred him that spoke uprightly (v. 10).

This most likely referred to the prophets themselves who told them of their sins and urged uprightness of life.

3. They trampled upon the poor (v. 11).

The rich built magnificent houses out of the proceeds extorted from the poor.

4. They afflicted the just (v. 12).

This they did by taking a bribe.

5. They turned aside the poor in the gate (v. 12).

Because they had no money the poor were turned aside.

It was most difficult for the poor to get justice. The times were so evil that the prudent would best keep silence.

IV. The Conduct of the Righteour (vv. 14, 15).

No condition in the world, religious, social or political can become so difficult that the righteous are shut off from help. The righteous can:

1. Seek God (v. 14).

Those who seek good shall have with them the Lord God of Hosts.

2. Hate the evil (v. 15).

Evil must be hated. The sin question must be settled before God can bestow His blessings.

3. Establish judgment in the gate.

It was the custom in that day for the courts of justice to sit in the gate of the city. The prophet urges upon them the responsibility to place honorable men in charge of public affairs.

V. The Judgment to Fall (vv. 16-20).

There is coming a day of retribution. Justice and right shall be vindicated. This will be realized in the day of the Lord (II Thess. 1:7-10; James 5:7). All wrong shall be righted at that time. May we earnestly pray, "thy kingdom come."

VI. Worship Without Holiness of Life an Abomination to God (vv. 21-27).

Sacrifices, observance of feast days and singing, when the heart is out of fellowship with God, is most displeasing to Him.

Two Different Things

The love of God and the world are two different things. If the love of this world dwell in thee, the love of God forsakes thee; renounce that, and receive this; it is fit that the nobler love should have the best place and acceptance.

House Not Made With Hands

The tent-life is the true life until the building of God, the "house not made with hands," is reached.—Phillips Brooks.

The BABY

No mother in this enlightened age would give her baby something she did not know was perfectly harmless, especially when a few drops of pure Castoria will right a baby's stomach and end almost any little ill. Fretfulness and fever, too; it seems no time until everything is serene.

That's the beauty of Castoria; its gentle influence seems just what is needed. It does all that castor oil might accomplish, without shock to the system. Without the evil taste. It's delicious! Being purely vegetable, you can give it as often as there's a sign of colic; constipation, diarrhea; or need to aid sound, natural sleep.

Just one warning: it is genuine Fletcher's Castoria that physicians recommend. Other preparations may be just as free from all doubtful drugs, but no child of this writer's is going to test them! Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold.

Children Cry for Fletcher's CASTORIA

Apparently Contradictory

Recently I attended an evening party where "chili con carne" was served. During the repast the five-year-old daughter of the family looked up and said: "Daddy, why do we call it chilly when it is so hot?"—Exchange.

$1,000 CHRISTMAS MONEY for the TEENIE WEENIES

"How many children can decorate in one paragraph the Teenie Weenie picture on our new pop corn pails?" asked the General one day.

"I don't know," said the Lady of Fashion, "but it would be interesting to find out who could write the best story about it;—why don't you offer a prize?"

WIN A PRIZE

So Mr. Donahey, creator of the original Teenie Weenies, has offered $1,000 in prizes for the best story of the Teenie Weenies popping corn as shown on the Monarch Teenie Weenie Pop Corn Pails.

Contest is open to children of all ages and prizes will be distributed in time for Christmas. Letters must reach the Teenie Weenie General by December 15, 1927. Decision of the judges will be final.

First prize, $100; second, $75, third, $50; fourth, $25; twenty-five prizes of $10 each, fifty prizes of $5 each; two hundred and fifty prizes of $1 each. One thousand Prize Teenie Weenie books.

Look for MONARCH TEENIE WEENIE POP CORN where grocers own and operate their own stores. All you have to do is describe the scene on a pail of Monarch Teenie Weenie Pop Corn in your short letter. Sign your name and address plainly and mail to

America Faces East

TOMB OF THE UNKNOWN SOLDIER

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT'S the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month. On Broadway and on State street; in Portland, Ore., in Portland, Maine, in Duluth, Minn., and in New Orleans the roar of traffic is hushed. In the factories and on the farms, men drop whatever tools of trade are in their hands and—

America faces East!

For this is Armistice day and all over the United States for the space two minutes Americans pause in their everyday tasks to pay reverent tribute to the dead. America faces East! And the thoughts of most Americans, as we stand uncovered amid familiar surroundings, speed across the Atlantic to some hillside in France where the long rows of white crosses mark the last resting place of those who fought about the mighty event which we celebrate on November 11. It may be at Romagne-sous-Montfaucon, where began that "soul trying struggle of many weeks between the Argonne forest and the Meuse, which lasted until the hour when Germany cried 'enough.'" Or it may be in Flanders field in Belgium or at Brookwood, England, for there, too, these gleaming markers stand guard over the sleep of American soldiers.

Armistice day is a day of remembrance—a day to recall that breathless moment nine years ago when a welcome message was flashed to the waiting world. The message was contained in the official news story sent out by the Associated Press, which reads as follows:

"Washington, Monday, Nov. 11, 2:48 a. m.—The armistice between Germany, on one hand, and the allied governments and the United States, on the other, has been signed.

"The State department announced at 2:45 o'clock this morning that Germany had signed.

"The department's announcement simply said: 'The armistice has been signed.'

"The World war will end this morning at 6 o'clock, Washington time, 11 o'clock Paris time.

"The armistice was signed by the German representatives at midnight.

"This announcement was made by the State department at 2:50 o'clock this morning.

"The announcement was made verbally by an official of the State department in this form:

"'The armistice has been signed. It was signed at 5 o'clock a. m., Paris time (midnight eastern time) and hostilities will cease at 11 o'clock this morning, Paris time, (6 o'clock eastern time).

"'The terms of the armistice will not be made public until later.'"

Armistice day is a day of remembrance—not of the riotous scenes which took place and the mad frenzy of joy which possessed the whole nation on the morning of November 11, 1918, when America's millions realized that it was "over over there," not of the triumphal processions when the khaki-clad millions returned home in 1919 and 1920. It is a day for remembrance of those who did not return, who were destined never to hear the cheers of the multitude nor to know whether or not they had died in vain—America's war dead.

From its first observance Armistice day has taken on its memorial significance rather than that of a day of rejoicing. There have been few more solemn moments in the history of this country than on Armistice day, 1921, when they brought America's Unknown Soldier back to his native land and buried him in Arlington. Though the thoughts of individual Americans may turn to some one cross in a French cemetery where lies a brother or a son or a husband, when the morning of November 11 dawns, America as a whole faces East and the observance of Armistice day centers around this national shrine, the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. For here is the common symbol for us all.

And on this day we remember the words of President Harding, uttered on that other armistice day:

> We do not know the eminence of his birth, but we do know the glory of his death. He died for his country, and greater devotion hath no man than this. He died unquestioning, uncomplaining, with faith in his heart and hope on his lips, that his country should triumph and its civilization survive. As a typical soldier of this representative democracy, he fought and died, believing in the indisputable justice of his country's cause.
> Sleeping in these hallowed grounds are thousands of Americans who have given their blood for the baptism of freedom and its maintenance, armed exponents of the nation's conscience. It is better and nobler for their deeds. Burial here is rather more than a sign of the government's favor; it is a suggestion of a tomb in the heart of the nation, sorrowing for its noble dead.
> Today's ceremonies proclaim that the hero unknown is not unhonored. We gather him to the nation's breast, within the shadow of the Capitol, of the towering shaft that honors Washington, the great father, and of the exquisite monument to Lincoln, the martyred savior. Here the inspirations of yesterday and the conscience of today forever unite to make the Republic worthy of his death for flag and country.
> I speak not as a pacifist fearing war, but as one who loves justice and hates war. I speak as one who believes the highest function of government is to give its citizens the security of peace, the opportunity to achieve, and the pursuit of happiness.
> As we return this poor clay to its mother soil, garlanded by love and covered with the decorations that only nations can bestow, I can sense the prayers of our people, of all peoples, that this Armistice day shall mark the beginning of a new and lasting era of peace on earth, good will among men.

Or we may remember that splendid tribute, written by Frank M. O'Brien, which appeared in the New York Herald on November 11, 1921, and which was awarded the Pulitzer prize for the best editorial article of the year. In it he spoke for all Americans when he wrote of

THE UNKNOWN SOLDIER

That which takes place today at the National cemetery in Arlington is a symbol, a mystery and a tribute. It is an entombment only in the physical sense. It is rather the enthronement of Duty and Honor. This man who died for his country is the symbol of these qualities; a far more perfect symbol than any man could be whose name and deeds we know. He represents more, really, than the unidentified dead, for we cannot separate them spiritually from the war heroes whose names are written on their gravestones. He—this spirit whom we honor—stands for the unselfishness of all.

This, of all monuments to the dead, is lasting and immutable. So long as men revere the finer things of life the tomb of the nameless hero will remain a shrine. Nor, with the shifts of time and mind, can there be a changing of values. No historian shall rise to modify the virtues or the faults of the Soldier. He has an immunity for which kings might pray. The years may bring erosion to the granite but not to the memory of the Unknown.

It is a common weakness of humanity to ask the questions that can never be answered in this life. Probably none to whom the drama of the Unknown Soldier has appealed has not wondered who, in the sunshine of earth, was the protagonist of today's ceremony. A logger from Penobscot? An orchardist from the Pacific coast? A well-driller from Texas? A machinist from Connecticut? A lad who left his hoe to rust among the Missouri corn? A longshoreman from Hell's Kitchen? Perhaps some youth from the tobacco fields, resting again in his own Virginia? All that the army tells us of him is that he died in battle. All that the heart tells is that some woman loved him. More than that no man shall learn. In this mystery, as in the riddle of the universe, the wise wonder; but they would not know.

What were his dreams, his ambitions? Likely he shared those common to the millions: a life of peace and honest struggle, with such small success as comes to most who try; and at the end the place on the hillside among his fathers. Today to do honor at his last resting place come the greatest soldiers of the age, famous statesmen from other continents, the President, the high judges and the legislators of his own country, and many men who, like himself, fought for the flag. At his bier will gather the most remarkable group that America has seen. And the tomb which Fate reserved for him is, instead of the narrow cell on the village hillside, one as lasting as that of Rameses and as inspiring as Napoleon's.

It is a great religious ceremony, this burial today. The exaltation of the nameless bones would not be possible except for Belief. Where were Duty and Honor, the well-springs of Victory, if mankind feared that death drew a black curtain behind which lay nothing but the dark? So all in whom the spark of hope has not died can well believe that we to whom the Soldier is a mystery are not a mystery to him. They can believe that the watchers at Arlington today are not merely a few thousands of the living but the countless battalions of the departed. "Though he were dead, yet shall he live"—there is the promise to which men hold when everything of this earth has slipped away.

All the impressive ritual of today would be a mockery if we did not believe that, out in an infinity which astronomers cannot chart or mathematicians bound, the Unknown Soldier and all the glorious dead whom we honor in his dust are looking down upon this little spinning ball, conscious of our reverence. And when noon strikes, signal for the moment of silent prayer, few of those who stand with bared head will lack conviction that the rites at Arlington are viewed by other than mortal eyes. Only in that spirit may we honor the Unknown Soldier and those who, like him, died for this Republic.

Unknown, but not unknowing!

Armistice day this year will have a greater significance than ever before for the reason that among those who will join in its observance are 100,000 or more members of the American Legion, who crossed the Atlantic in September to attend the annual Legion convention in Paris.

While they were there they adopted a resolution to have Armistice day made a national legal holiday. For although it is generally observed as a holiday in the United States, it has not yet been proclaimed as a national legal holiday. The following states have made it a legal holiday by legislative enactment: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, North Carolina, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, and the territory of Hawaii. In the other states it is a legal holiday by governor's proclamation only. This "Second A. E. F." is home now and its members are bringing with them the memories of their recent visit to those places where they made history nine and ten years ago. They're bringing, too, memories of their visit to the places where once they saw a hell of gunfire blast all signs of life from the earth, but where now green grass grows as a vivid background for the long rows of white crosses—in the Oise-Aisne, at St. Mihiel, in the Aisne-Marne, at the Somme and at Suresnes. And as they remember reading on the crosses the name of some buddy, with whom they lived and laughed through it all until a burst of shrapnel signalled "partnership dissolved," it's more than likely that Armistice day will take on a new meaning to them.

What will that meaning be? A day of rejoicing that when others died they were spared? A day for envy of the peaceful sleep of those who hold the bivouac of the dead while they must face each day the troublesome problems of modern life? Or will it be a day for seeing clearly the folly of mankind who goes to war, the uselessness of war and for a high resolve that "this must not be again."

UNKNOWN

I have come back to my mother's land—
I was long, too long away.
She shades her eyes with a blue-veined hand
In the sunlit upland day
And looks at my saddle, my horse, my gun—
For my haunts were not the strown.
My western mother has murmured "Son!"
So why am I called Unknown?

I have come back to my mother's land,
Where the yellow pine glades are;
The cypress flutters, by warm breeze fanned
And the rose scent floats afar,
There's a plash of oars on quiet streams
And a bright-hued bird has flown
Like those that colored my youthful dreams
Ere they called me the Great Unknown.

I have come back to my mother's land,
Where the surf's like distant drums,
And the fishing craft make bright the strand
And a kindly neighbor comes—
For such is the way of the village folk
When a woman is left alone.
It's of me they talk, when she doffs her cloak,
So why am I called Unknown?

For I belong to them—Mothers All—
From the seas to the plains of sage,
From the hills that rock to the snowslide's fall
To the desert gray-lined with age.
And my tomb shall vibrate with messages
All couched in that mother tone
Which stirs the heart. Ah, then, who says
That I have returned Unknown?

—Arthur Chapman.

To Buy or Make for Christmas

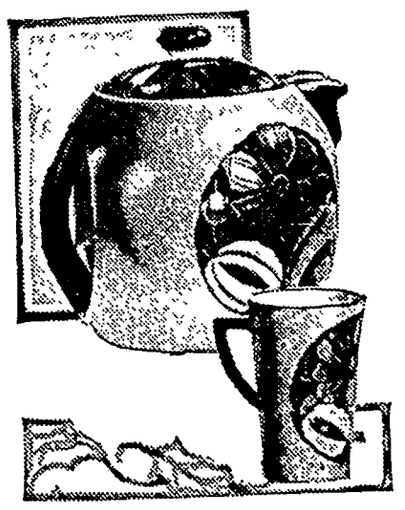
For Baby's Comfort

If baby could write, it is fair to suppose that Santa Claus would be deluged with letters saying, "Please, dear old Nick, bring me a nice little hot-water bottle to make me comfy." A miniature hot-water bottle in a beflowered satin case is a cunning gift. It doubles the message of comfort if a bit of talcum powder be included. These nursery requisites are obtainable in matched sets, beautified with flower craft which creates such wonderfully lovely posies out of satin ribbon.

In Santa's Menagerie

What a din of "bow-wows" and "quack-quacks" there would be if all the animals and ducks and chickens and such in Santa's pack should start to talk at once. The calico dog in this picture, with eyes painted so big and ears so long, is not half as ferocious as he looks. In fact, he makes friends not only with children, but the flapper contingent, who doting on the sensational, call them "snuggle dogs," carrying them under their arm with true "beauty and the beast" effect. As to the other dog and duck, you can get them at almost any fancy work department stamped on pique ready to embroider. They launder perfectly.

Czechoslovakian Pottery



Much to the joy of the art connoisseur genuine Czechoslovakian pottery is finding its way (reasonably priced considering its beauty), into America's yuletide displays. This ware is actually handmade and hand-decorated in the very peasant homes. The highly colorful designs are the same as in vogue as far back as eleven hundred years ago. Anyone would be proud to receive a gift of pitcher (note its unique convex handle) and goblets to match like the one in the picture.

Of Gay Enamel Cloth

A cushion of colorful enamel cloth with bas-relief of realistic-looking gay flowers is warranted to bring a real thrill on Christmas morn to the friend who enthuses on the subject of interior decoration, and who waxes eloquent over "a note of color" in the scheme of things. Do not confuse enamel cloth with glazed chintz or cretonne or anything of that sort. It looks rather like colored patent leather and it is produced in every lovely shade, both pastel tints and exotic colorings, also black.

Feel Tired and Languid?

ALWAYS tired and achy? Sure your kidneys are working right? Sluggish kidneys allow waste poisons to remain in the blood and make one dull and languid, with often nagging backache, drowsy headaches and dizziness. A common warning is scanty or burning secretions.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's, a stimulant diuretic, increase the secretion of the kidneys and aid in the elimination of waste impurities. They are praised the world over. Ask your neighbor!

Church Seeks Motorists

Country ministers in England are becoming more and more anxious to make the automobilist welcome at church, and more than 500 of them have offered to provide parking space for automobiles, states the secretary of the Owner-Drivers' club, in London. In many instances clergymen are offering their own grounds for parking cars, while in others suitable space close by is suggested. There are also numerous cases in which a clergyman, in offering parking facilities, adds the hope that the motorist visiting his church will make himself known after the service, so that the minister can exchange greetings.

Guard Against "Flu" With Musterole

Influenza, Grippe and Pneumonia usually start with a cold. The moment you get those warning aches rub on good old Musterole.

Musterole relieves the congestion and stimulates circulation. It has all the good qualities of the old-fashioned mustard plaster without the blister.

First you feel a warm tingle as the healing ointment penetrates the pores, then a soothing, cooling sensation and quick relief. Have Musterole handy for emergency use. It may prevent serious illness.

To Mothers: Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

Warm, Moist Air For Every Room

The principle of the new Globe RAY-BOY and GLO-BOY'S operation is a great step forward in home heating. It is as important an improvement over the ordinary stove as Franklin's first heate was over the drafty open fireplace. As a matter of fact, he Ray-Boy and Glo-Boy is NOT a stove, IT IS A FURNACE, with the famous points of GLOBE construction—furnace satisfaction. No heat pipes or registers to put in—simply set it up and connect it with the flue.

Build a small fire and you will be asonished by the way it heats EVERY room!

That's the secret of the Ray-Boy and Glo-Boy. And the floor is warmed by radiation.

A REAL PARLOR FURNACE!

The first basket ball game of the season for the Shamrocks will be played with the Hayfield quintet at Hayfield on Friday evening, Nov. 18 and a large delegation of Klemme basket ball fans are expected see the game.

Some good men of last yar will be lacking onthe team this year but Coach Heiden is building up a good team which should show up well after a little experience on the court.

Small Attendance At P. T. A.

Our P. T. A. Program was not so well attended but a good one. M s. P W. Johnson and Mrs. Ralph Ludeke discussed the relation of good schools to the community and home while Mr. Tompkins, of Garner, talked on the relation of the the schools to good government. All were well worth hearing. Mr. Lewis and his high school orchestra gave two good numbers, and Miss Mildred Johnson rendered a beautiful violin solo which inspired a call by the audience for another number. She was accompanied by her sister, Irene.

Demonstrate Hot Lunches

Mr. Lewis of our physics department, explained the principle of the thermos bottle, how it is constructed to maintain or exclude hea and keep its contents eiher hot or cold for several hours. These bottles were on display after being filled several hours previous to the program with vegetable soup, hot chocolate and hot tomato soup. Mrs. Ralph Ludeek sent us a lunch kit containing a thermos bottle and a model lunch for school children. The rural students are using these bottles today and taking their hot lunches from home at a minimum expense.

Had Good Meeing At D. M.

Our tachers report some good things heard at Des Moines last week and feel the trip was worth the time and expense. They have begun their work with renewed interest this week and we believe the community will reap a reward f r their going

Several parents and friends of our school have already accepted our invitation to attend school this week and we trust others may visit us yet. As one day of educational week is to be devoted to "knowing your school" what better way can be found than by visiting classes.

Students Investigate Needs

Several of our students have been investigating our school neds and have listed several, such as high school encyclopedias, dictionaries. waste baskets, a new book case for high school assembly room some maps for grades 3 and 4, also for the high school, and good pictures for school room walls. They suggest better ventilation. more books, and magazines, some smaller seats for grades 5 and 6 and higher chairs for the primary room. Our board cannot easily supply all of these at any one time but may decide they can make a beginning. They have since we have been in Klemme spent several dollars for laboratory apparatus, lockrs, books, teacher's desk, desks for primary room, a cabinet for the superintendent's ogice, equipment for manual arts department, and for maps for both high school and grades. Improvements will be made as fast as funds permit. Not all can be secured at any one time.

Quite a little interest was shown in the immunization treatmen for dyptheria at our P. T. A. program and we hope many may follow the example of not a few of our parents and have this treatment administered as a precaution. If enough will volunteer in or near Klemme we can secure the material and service required at a very reasonable price. Send the superintendent word.

TO THE PATRONS OF THE KLEMME SCHOOL

We are again threatened by a Diptheria Epidemic. The State Board of Health has offered us 100 doses of Toxin Antitoxin o immunize our school children Free. After the first 100 doses a charge of 12½ cents per dose will be made A doctor and nurse will be at the School Nov. 14 21, 28 to administer the treatment A charge of $1 00 will be made to cover expenses of doctors and nurse.

The treatment consists of three doses at one week intervals. This is neither painful or harmful and protects against diptheria.

Our surrounding towns have given this course last year. It is not compulsary, only an ffer to you to protect your children at a reduced cost.

VEGETABLES WILL KEEP WHEN BURIED IN THE GROUND

Makes It Possible To Keep Some Of Them Fresh Until Spring

With a minimum amount of time and trouble, various root crops and vegetables such as cabbage, parsnips carrots and beets may bo stored in such a way as to provide the table with fresh garden stores far into the spring, says C. V Holsinger, vegetable crop specialist with the Extension Service at Iowa State College.

If a vegetable cellar or cave cannot be used, many Iowa farmers have had unusual success with their parsnips by placing the vegetables in boxes Each layer of vegetables should be separated by a 'ayer of soil The boxes are allowed to freeze and then should be covered with straw or hay in order to prevent premature thawing. As the parsnips are needed, they may be taken out a box at a time.

Another method advocated by the vegetable specialists is to place the vegetables in a tight barrel which has been buried in the ground. Mr. Holsinger says that cabbages stored in this way have often been kept fresh until early in May.

IOWA FIGHTS TUBERCULOSIS

Thirty-two Accredited Areas Now Located In State

Iowa farmers are in the lead in the nationwide tuberculosis eradication campaign, with a total of 32 counties accredited as tuberculosis-free areas.

According to recent statistics furnished by the United States Department of Agriculture, 347 counties in the nation have completed the tests and are officially recognized as free from tuberculosis among the livestock.

There are 945 counties actively engaged in cleaning out tuberculosis at the present time, according to the government report. Four Iowa counties now are completing the tests and soon will be accredited areas.

GIMER HAS GOOD CONVENTION SCORE

IOWA BUTTER MAKERS HAVE FINE MEETING AT M. C.

First Prize Taken By M. P. Junker Of Ruthven

The Iowa Butter Makers Convention which was held at Mason City last week, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday was the best which had ever been held in the history of the Association, according to reports.

Besides being well attended by the butter-makers and secretaries of the state many prominent visitors and men interested in dairying were on hand as well as representatives from machinery and supply companies and butter market men.

A remarkable feature of the convention this year was the high quality of the butter entered in the contest and of the one hundred twenty-one tubs competing only three tubs scored less han ninety.

First prize was taken by M. P. Junker of Ruthven, with a score of 95.50 E J. Primus of Arlington was a close second with a score of 95.25 and third place was taken by John Schroeder of Westgate with a score of 95 00. The sweep-take prizes went to Otto F. Weger of Strawberry Point who scored 94.63; E. J. Primus, Arlington, 94.34 and H. C. Stendel, Northwood, 94.34.

Prominent speakers at the convention were Mark Thornburg, secretary of agriculture; W. D. Munn, of Chicago; Miss Chinn of Chicago; and Clyde Bectelheimer of Waterloo.

Gimer Makes Good Score

A D Gimer, Klemme butter-maker, who has captured a number of ribbons and medals in the past few years did not get in on the prizes but made an excellent showing w'th the tub of butter he entered received a score of 93.33, which was well up with the high ranking buttermakers.

Others from this vicinity were. Soran Christensen Forest City, who scored 90.33; O. J. Kloock, Whi'temore formerly of Garner, 93.00; C R Conway, Garner, 93.33; H. P. METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Ganger, Pastor

We will observe all services regular next Sunday. On Sunday evening Dr. H. C. Burgholder of Pittsburg, Pa., wil fill our pulpit. He is a man with a message.

Ladies Aid Bazar and Supper is on Friday of this week. This is an annual event and should find generous response.

On Sunday November 20 is our annual White Cross Sunday when enrollments are made in this splendid organization for the coming year The response has been most excellent during the past years, with last yar as our Banner Year.

The proceeds realized are to help those who need hospital care but are too poor to pay for it.

Only Twelve

It is a great relief to know that a well-known fashion expert says that any man should be able to struggle along with only twelve suits of clothes. All that most of us have to do now is just to buy eleven more suits aud we will be all fixed up.

BOUGHT GROCERY STORE AT TRAER

KLEMME MAN WILL GO INTO GROCERY BUSINESS SOON

Wil Take Possession Of Established Grocery Store Nov. 21st

Wm. C. Keraus, of this city, has closed a deal at Traer, Iowa, whereby he becomes the owner of an established grocery store formerly owned by Mr. J. T. Leehy, Traer businessman. Mr. Keraus takes full pos session of the business Monday, November 21st.

The store is one of the old reliable established grocery stocks in one of the best business towns in Iowa. Being located on a corner and adjacent to two highways which pass by, it should be ideally located.

Mr. Keraus, although a young man in years has spent practically all of his life "behind the counter' aud has made a study of retail selling.

Recently he has been connected with the Wellemeyer Co., of this city and of the total of nearly fourteen years with tha concern has spen the past seven years as credit man for the Wellemeyer Store. He has gained a lot f experience in the retail work and should make a success of the business in Traer. Mr. Keraus is a live-wire and it is with regret that we lose him from our business circle in Klemme.

"Bill," as we are more want to call him, has always been a good booster for everything thats good in Klemme. He has taken a great interest in band work and has given much of his time to that organization, both as a cornet player and as a member of the board. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and a faithful member in that organization.

Mr. and Mrs. Keraus and their two sons, Otho a sophomore in high school, and Verle a pupil in the seventh grade, expect to leave Klemme next Wednesday for their new home at Traer. Klemme regrets to lose this fine family who have been residents here for so long, but their many friends wish them happiness and success at Traer.

Mr. Keraus states that he is having some remodeling done on his store and that he is also having it re-decorated. He plans to make a number of changes in the arrangement of the store to better serve the public.

The Times wishes him and his family much success.

FRANK ROSENDAHL DIED AT HIH HOME FRIDAY

Was A Resident Of Hancock County For A Number Of Years

F. J. Rosendahl passed away at his home in Liberty township Friday morning, November 4. Mr. Rosendahl had been ill for about a year suffering with heart disease and other complications.

Mr. Rosendahl was born in Missouri, November 26, 1874 and came to Hancock County about twenty-five years ago. About twenty-nine years ago, while residing in his native state he was married to Miss Louisa Kropp and to this union six children were born, five of whom survive him, besides his wife. The children are: Erwin, who farms for himself; Walter, at home; Mrs. Mabel Schlawin; an dthe Misses Della 13 and Louisa 11.

Mr. Rosendahl was an honorable, industrious man, a good Christian and had been an active member f the Elltown Reformed Church.

Funeral services were held Monday with a short service at the home followed by the service at the Reformed church, conducted by Rev. C. A. Schmid and burial was made in the Elltown cemetery, adjoining the church grounds.

The family have the sympathy of the entire community in their hour of sorrow.

LIBERTY AND ELL F. B. LADIES ENJOY MEETING

Clothing Project Will Be Taken Up Beginning In January

The Liberty and Ell township Farm Bureau ladies enjoyed a meeting at the home of Mrs. Wm. Schlawin, Friday, November 4th.

At this meeting the lesson was on China, Silverwrae and Linen and was greatly enjoyed by all. This was the last lesson of the Home Furnishing project, which was in charge of Miss Merle Raemer.

Mis Hanson gave a demonstration on Jello, which was also very interesting.

The meeting Friday was very well attended and instructive.

Next year's work will be on Clothing and will begin in January

Surprise And Shower

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bell entertained a number of friends Tuesday evening, November 8th, in honor of Dr. and Mrs. D. P. Anderson. A shower was planned and they received many beautiful gifts, and were both greatly surprised as they did not suspicion a party had been planned on them. A delicious two course luncheon was served by the hostess. One of the features was a beautifuly decorated wedding cake made by Mrs. J. N. Day, bearing the initials of the newlyweds and date of the shower. The guests stayed until a late hour and all departed wishing Dr. and Mrs. Anderson a long and happy wedded life.

WESTERN AT LYRIC THIS WEEK FRIDAY AND SATURDAY

"Dance Magic" Will Be Shown Next Tuesday And Wednesday

Proof that real ambition has no limit and that even a masted can always learn something new, is said to be furnished by Ken Maynard in "Somewhere South in Sonora," coming Friday and Saturday, Nov. 11-12 at the Lyric Theatre, Garner.

Maynard was star rider and roper of the Barnum-Bailey-Ringling Bros. Circus for seven years, the ambition of every circus cowboy. It was Maynard's ambition to go even higher on the ladder to fame which led him to desert the sawdust for the camera lens.

"Dance Magic" Next Week

The First National Picture staring Pauline Starke and Ben Lyon in "Dance Magic," will be shown next Tuesday and Wednesday, November 15-16 at the Lyric, Garner, Iowa.

Miss Starke plays the part of a girl who revolts against the harshness of her New England home to run away to New York and become a dancer. Lyon is cast as a young man about town who takes an interest in the unsophisticated but ambitious girl and helps her win a trial in a Broadway revue. Then follws action—don't miss this one!

M. T. LOVE LEADS IN ASSOCIAT'N 3

ELDER, OF KLEMME COMES IN FOR SECOND PLACE

V. A. Cook Had Highest Ranking Cow For The Month

Three hundred and sixteen cows in Hancock County Cow Test Association No. 3 were on test in the 25 herds tested for the month of October From his number 28 produced over 40 pounds of fat and 8 over 5? pounds. Thirty cows wore sold within the association this month, 21 of these were sold for milk and nine were culled out as unprofitable, and sold for beef. Every month a number of so-called dairy cows are sold for beef through the work of the cow testing association. Many dairy men give the excuse for not joining the association because they might have to sell some of their cows. They do not realize that though the gross income from the herd would be reduced by weeding out the "boarders" the net profits would be materially increased It is a very poor cow that will not show a reasonable profit above feed cost with butterfat a 60 cents per pound. The dairyman who will be making money from his cows with butterfat at 35 cents per pound will be the one who has only a high producing herd.

The highest average for herds for the month was made by the pure bred and grade Guernsey herd f M T. Love, of Garner. This herd of sixteen cows, fourteen of which were in milk, and two dry, made an average of 559 pounds of milk and 29.36 pounds of fat.

The pure bred Holstein and grade Guernsey herd of R. W. Elder of Klemme was second. Eight cows, all in milk, averaged 685 pounds of milk and 27.93 pounds of fat.

The grade Holstein herd owned by Ben Goll, of Garner, five cows in milk and three dry, averaged 695 pounds of milk and 26.9 pounds of fat.

Albert Swanson, of Klemme, with his herd of grade Holsteins, seven in milk and one dry, made an average of 681 pounds of milk and 25.9 pounds of fat.

V. A. Cook, of Goodell, had high cow for the month "Bess" a pure bred Holstein produced 1449 pounds of milk and 62.3 pounds of fat

"Paul," a grade Holstein owned by R. W. Elder, of Klemme, produced 1482 pounds of milk and 56.3 pounds of fat.

MARY PICKFORD WAS NOT FIRST AMERICA'S SWEETHEART

Long before Mary Pickford was heard of a young girl, who was born in a frontier log cabin in Ohio, had started on the road to fame and to the piace in the hearts of Americans which righfully gave her the title of "First 'America's Sweetheart.' "

This girl became the greatest markswoman history has ever known, honored by European mouarchs as well as by her own people, a girl who might have averted the World war if her aim had not been so true.

If you would know the romantic story of Annie Oakley be sure to read the illustrated feature article, "The First 'America's Sweetheart' " by Elmo Scott Watson in this issue of The Times.

LAND, AIR AND SEA

To accidents on land and sea are added those in the air. Man has acquired another method of being killed. While people are in motion they are is danger, regardless of the mode of transportation. While they are still, there is also danger. There is no safety, for while life lasts it is ever threatened. Well to remember that. But that does not mean on wih the dance, let joy be unconfined, because tomorrow may never dawn. It calls for precautions in order that life may be prolonged; thoughts so that it may be enriched; decent pleasure and conduct so that it may be happy.

BUFFALO BILL AND SITTING BULL TAKEN 1885 ©Barry

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE mention of rifles and Buffalo Bill and other romantic things caused more than one boy to read carefully that notice of Annie Oakley's death. It caused a question which would never have been thought of thirty years ago. But today:

"Pop, who was Annie Oakley?" came the query in many a home when the short dispatch made known the fact that "Little Missy" was gone. And in many a home an interrogated father halted in his reading. The room had faded. In its place, a great amphitheater stretched in a vastness of distance, of flying forms, of scenery, of throng-packed tiers of seats. At one side there waved and nodded the eagle-plumed headdresses of the representatives of the Sioux, the Kiowa, the Comanche and the Cheyenne. Yonder a stalwart man in flowing hair and straight brushed goatee, his buckskin coat fitting snug over massive shoulders, rode like a god upon his prancing horse. Farther away, the old Deadwood stagecoach awaited the cue for the daily encounter with the "deadly aborigine of mountain and plain." And right out there—less than a score of feet away, shooting against Johnny Baker for the "champeenship of the Wild West—

"Who was Annie Oakley?" asked many a father that night. "She was my first sweetheart, son'"

Thus does Courtney Ryley Cooper end his book "Annie Oakley—Woman at Arms," a biography published by Duffield and company of New York, this year, a book which will recall to many of us that glamorous period of our youth when the visit of Buffalo Bill's Wild West show was an annual event to be looked forward to almost as much as the Fourth of July, Christmas or the last day of school. Circus day is not included in that list of red letter days, for a very obvious reason—there was more than one circus. But there was only one Buffalo Bill and one Buffalo Bill show.

And there never was and never will be again but one Annie Oakley—"Little Miss Sure Shot," undoubtedly the greatest markswoman in history. Cooper is right in having "many a father that night" say to his son, "She was my first sweetheart." For long before the screen placed the face of Mary Pickford before the eyes of millions of Americans, this girl, born August 13, 1866, who was christened Phoebe Anne Oakley Mozee and who was destined to make the shortened form of her name, "Annie Oakley," known throughout the world, had won the right to the title of the first "America's Sweetheart."

There is more than one reason why Annie Oakley has an enduring claim to that title. Although not all of these reasons were generally known at the height of her popularity, her biography shows that Young America did not guess wrong in making her his "sweetheart" and offering to her such a full measure of admiration and devotion. The life story of Annie Oakley is a combination Cinderella fairy story, frontier melodrama—albeit a clean melodrama—and a sort of female Horatio Alger-rise-to-fame yarn.

The Cinderella part of it begins with the pioneer home near a small cross-roads settlement in Darke county, Ohio, where in a little log cabin lived Jake Mozee and his wife, whom, as a twelve-year-old child he had rescued from a brutal stepfather in Pennsylvania. He had given her a home with his sister and, after marrying her when she was fifteen, set out with her to make a new home in the Ohio country. In this new home Mozee and his wife fought a constant battle with privation and poverty. Then Mozee, returning from the mill, was frozen to death in a blizzard and upon the mother fell the whole task of providing for her seven children.

At the age of six Annie began helping fill the family larder by trapping quail and a few years later she had made the first start on the rifle career that was to make her famous. One of the few possessions which Jake Mozee had brought with him from Pennsylvania was a 40-inch cap and ball Kentucky rifle which hung over the fireplace, but which had never been used because Mozee was a Quaker with the Quaker prejudice against firearms. The tomboy Annie, however, did not share that prejudice. She saw in the weapon an instrument for getting more food for her brothers and sisters, and finally gained her mother's reluctant consent.

But the beginning of her career as a markswoman was soon interrupted. She went to the county infirmary to get the chance to attend school and while there a stranger appeared and offered to take one of the girls at the infirmary to work for her "board and keep." Annie was the girl selected and in the home of this man began her Cinderella existence. The man was a brute and his wife a virago. Annie was held as a virtual slave subjected to all sorts of cruel treatment. Once when she fell asleep over a basket of mending the woman threw her out into a snowstorm half-naked. After two years of this existence she finally escaped and returned home.

There she continued her former role of provider for the family with the rifle and thus laid the foundation for the marvelous skill which was to make her world famous. News of her skill spread throughout Darke county and even to Cincinnati where hotel keepers had been buying the game which she killed. When Annie was fifteen there came to Cincinnati the "far-famed team of Butler and company, performing deeds of daring and dexterity with firearms, seldom exhibited before the eyes of an audience." As a publicity stunt, Frank E. Butler was accustomed to issue a challenge to all comers to a shooting match. The challenge was taken up by one of Annie's hotelkeeping patrons who prevailed upon her to shoot against the professional.

The girl not only won the match, but also won the heart of Frank Butler and a year or so later they were married. She began taking part in her husband's act and for some time they were billed as "Butler and Oakley. Then Butler, who was a skillful showman, began giving his wife more and more of the limelight and pushing himself more and more into the background. Within a short time she was a noted figure in the eastern theaters.

At one time while they were playing in St. Paul a delegation of Sioux Indians, who were on their way to Washington for a conference with the "Great White Father," attended the theater where Butler and Oakley were presenting their act. One of the delegation was the famous Sitting Bull, who gave evidence of his approval of the girl's marksmanship with many a "Waste!" (Good). Finally as she performed her most difficult feat, that of shooting the end from a cigarette held between the teeth of her husband, Sitting Bull arose in great excitement shouting "Watanya Cicilia!" (Little Sure Shot). Little Sure Shot was the name of one of his daughters who had died, and so greatly was he impressed with Annie Oakley's prowess that he sent an interpreter to her after the show and asked permission to adopt her as his daughter. She consented and the ceremony took place at the hotel. After that managers were more eager than ever to book the act of Sitting Bull's adopted daughter.

In the meantime Col. W. F. Cody, "Buffalo Bill," had organized his Wild West show, but the first year had been almost a failure. While it was playing in New Orleans Frank Butler and Annie Oakley, who were then traveling with a circus, visited the show and decided that they would prefer being a part of this outfit than of the circus. Cody could not afford to pay the salary that Butler asked so nothing came of it at the time. But the next year their trails crossed again at Louisville, Ky., and Nate Salsbury, Buffalo Bill's partner, who happened to be passing by while Annie and her husband were rehearsing their act, was so impressed by it and its possibilities as a part of his show that he hired them on the spot. So in the year 1885 Annie Oakley joined the Buffalo Bill Wild West show and there began that series of amazing triumphs which this former Ohio waif was to share with one of the greatest figures the show world has ever known.

It was through her influence that another feature was added to the show which greatly enhanced its popularity. For some time Buffalo Bill had been trying to induce Sitting Bull to join his company. But the old Sioux leader steadfastly refused. After Annie joined the show Cody tried again. He sent an interpreter to Sitting Bull with the word that "Watanya Cicilia" was with his show and wanted Sitting Bull to join also. There was no further argument. Sitting Bull came forthwith! And the crowds which turned out to see the reputed leader of the Indians at the Custer battle, the great buffalo hunter and the great markswoman increased at every city in which the show appeared.

After a successful season of 1886 on Staten island and in Madison Square garden, N. Y., Buffalo Bill began looking around for new worlds to conquer. He found it first in England where he took his show on the occasion of Queen Victoria's jubilee in London. It was during this engagement that Annie won her famous shooting match with the Grand Duke Michael of Russia, a match which had been arranged by the prince of Wales (later Edward VII).

Two years later Buffalo Bill's Wild West was showing in Paris. Cody had met with financial reverses and he hoped to recoup his losses in the French capital. But on the grand opening day, with the President of France and other high officials present, it soon became apparent that the show was doomed to be a "flop." The French simply couldn't "get" the meaning of it all—the bucking horses, the mimic warfare between the cowboys and the Indians, whom, incidentally, they thought were fakes.

But when Annie Oakley gave her exhibition of marksmanship—then it was different. Here was something they could understand, and she was given an ovation that a queen might be thrilled over. For the French had never seen such shooting as this. Here are a few of the stunts that she performed: In shooting clay pigeons, she stood 20 feet back of the traps, started with the pulling of the trap, ran the 20 feet, picked up her gun and broke the pigeon while it was still in the air. Using three double-barreled shotguns she broke six glass balls thrown into the air at once. She shot a dime from between her husband's thumb and forefinger at 30 paces. Perhaps the most famous of her stunts was that of shooting the ashes from a cigarette in the mouth of Kaiser Wilhelm, then the Crown Prince of Germany. Had her aim been a little less true, the World war might never have been fought!

Annie Oakley ended her career with the Buffalo Bill show in 1901. Then tragedy came into her life again. On the last journey of the season the show train was wrecked in North Carolina. Annie Oakley was desperately injured. But the same courage that had always carried her through every emergency carried her through five operations and years of agony. Although the doctors had said she could never handle a gun again, she staged a "come-back," and at Pinehurst, N. C., in April, 1922, she broke 100 clay targets straight, shooting from 16 yards.

Annie Oakley had many other interests besides her shooting. Although at one time she was making $1,000 a week, her estate at her death last year was comparatively small. Perhaps the fact that she supported and educated an adopted family of 18 children as well as giving generously to many charities had something to do with that. When the news of her death was flashed from Dayton, Ohio, on November 4, 1926, to revive her name and fame, it also started a discussion as to why free passes to a circus or theater are now universally known as "Annie Oakleys." In this book Mr. Cooper gives the origin of the phrase as follows:

One of her feats was to place a playing card, the ace of hearts, as a target at a distance of 25 yards. Then, firing 25 shots in 27 seconds, she would obliterate that ace of hearts in the center, leaving only bullet holes in its place. A card thus shot by Annie Oakley formed quite a souvenir in the eighties.

There came into being a baseball magnate who looked with some disfavor upon passes—as all baseball managers look upon these avenues of free admission. It is the custom, that the door tender may know the ticket to be free, to punch a hole or two in the card, thus saving a miscount when the proceeds of the day were checked. One day a card came to the gate which had been thoroughly perforated. The magnate remarked laconically:

"Huh! Looks like Annie Oakley'd shot at it!"

What Dr. Caldwell Learned in 47 Years Practice

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time regardless of how much one tries to avoid it. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It cannot harm the most delicate system and is not a habit forming preparation. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it. It does not gripe. Thousands of mothers have written us to that effect.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when a medicine like Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly, more cleanly and gently, without griping and harm to the system.

Keep free from constipation! It robs your strength, hardens your arteries and brings on premature old age. Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to a druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Take the proper dose that night and by morning you will feel like a different person. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Always have a bottle in the house, and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open.

A FAT OLD SPLEEN CELL WHO HAS SWALLOWED MANY OLD RED ONES.

"SOME people think that man now knows it all—but the best scientists now realize we never shall do that on this earth. Thus we know there are what we must call 'natural' or 'absolute' units, beyond which we, on this universe, cannot go. One of these units is a velocity of 186,000 miles per second—the speed of light. Another is the absolute depth of cold, when there is no heat at all. Beyond these we cannot go. Moreover we are not yet wise enough even to know what all the things in our big machine are put there for. And though they go on working, we don't even know what it is they are doing. Only in 1923 did we find out what that sly fellow, Insulin, was busy over. This shows how infinitely more wonderful than ours must he the wisdom that directed the making of our bodies and of our world. Nobody knows what consciousness is—we do know it is not necessary to the life of the body, because we go to sleep and become unconscious without the least fear. This potato is alive, but if I thought it was conscious I wouldn't care to eat it. We know that the sun attracts the earth, and the earth the sun—but we don't know why. We know this pen will fall down if I let go of it. We say, of course it will, 'because that is a law of nature.' But we don't know why it falls. Laws don't explain anything—they only state facts and leave us little wiser. So I must bring these talks to a close, leaving lots of things unexplained. As you ask me questions, I will collect them, and we will talk over the answers another time.

"Today I want to say one word about defenses. The best defense is prevention—far better than cure. The wisdom that built up our bodies knew that—and already we have spoken of many defenses. Of the most wonderful, we have said little. Amongst them come first the factories that have no ordinary outlet through a channel that we can see, but that, like the islands in the pancreas, slip their most wonderful secrets right into the blood stream. There are four of these chief factories—one in the neck called the thyroid. Man has now found out its messenger. He has called it thyroidin. It has much to do with control of growth, and its discovery is one of the great triumphs of science. A child who has, for any reason, no thyroid, is a stunted dwarf, ugly, and feeble-minded. (See picture.) Here is a picture of one taken by Doctor Osler, two years old, and here is the same three years old after a year's feeding on Thyroidin. On the other hand, some people have too much, and would die if doctors didn't take away part of the factory.

"Then there are small factories called 'Near Thyroids,' but we don't know what they do, though we do know they are absolutely necessary. The tiny factories in the middle of the floor of the brain used to be thought to be the home of man's soul. It is called the 'Pituitary' body. We now know that its secret messenger has a direct control of the pipes and pump—and also some influence on growth.

"On the very top of the kidney is still another factory. Its messenger we use a great deal to contract the small pipes and to stop bleeding. You have heard of it perhaps. We call it just adrenalin, which only means on-the-kidney. The big spleen we know now is the great filter of the blood itself. Its cells also eat up dying reds, and probably help to make new ones. (See picture.)

"Of the other kinds of glands, there are nearly 50, all built up much on the same principle, and in each there are specially trained cells to produce special products needed for some part of the body, and yet all these work together, for the body is really one unit. Protoplasm, like cement, actually unites cell to cell all over the body.

"The more complicated a town is, the more dependent one man in it is on another: the doctor on the lawyer, the lawyer on the doctor, the householder on the carpenter, and the carpenter on the householder, the mistress on the cook, and the cook on the mistress—each person does one thing that the others can't do. I have found educated men from great cities who would starve to death where a roving Eskimo will make a good living. The world can, however, only really get on by every one doing his part well. So remember the world needs you. You are not in it to get things, but to give things.

"You have been born for some purpose. That, and that only, makes life worth while. For it is so short and, however much we get, we can carry nothing with us but the record of what we did.

"Look at this old robin's nest on the window sill. Only a few days ago we were watching the robins build it with great care. Then we saw the young robins born in it, and today they are already all gone. And now we burn the nest, which is only so much rubbish and is in our way. While you and I have time, let us try to enjoy the greatest happiness, that of helping to make a better world.

"Of all the pictures I know, one somehow helps me more than any other. There was once a poor doctor, but a very earnest, fine man. He noticed that the lives of people who milked cows with a kind of rash on them, were spared when that terrible scourge called 'smallpox' was killing one in ten of the population of the world. He loved his little baby boy as much as your father does. But he was so splendid a knight that after he had taken every possible precaution he decided to put some of the poisonous composition into the body of his own little boy to find out if it really would save children's lives. The picture is of him trying that—and it did all that he hoped. Doctor Jenner will never be forgotten, because directly and indirectly he has probably saved more human lives than any other man who ever lived. Abraham Lincoln, David Livingston, Professor Pasteur, Lord Lister, most of the world's great men have been exactly like you and me, and like 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch' They did their bit! And so, as Longfellow tells us, we too, if we will, can each be a hero in the strife.'

"So begin by knowing all you can about, and holding absolutely sacred, your body; the only one in which you can face that great adventure that men call LIFE."

The Last Word

"Mother's little helper" was engrossed in the mystic art of cake baking. She mixed, stirred, beat, and poured the dough until it promised to be a wonderful pastry. When it was taken from the oven, it was a lucious golden brown. But, alas, when it was cut, it had the texture of rubber And, as if that wasn't enough to break his sister's heart, little brother had to say at dinner, "Hey, sis, bounce me a piece of that cake, will you?"—Indianapolis News.

Celebrates 104th Birthday

"I be merry," was the quick response of Mrs. Sophia Bird of Loughborough, Ireland, when congratulated on her recent birthday, which was her one hundred fourth. "I am very comfortable, and shall do my best to hold up for another birthday," she added smiling. All day long there was a procession of well-wishers who were met with a cheerful word and smile. Mrs. Bird arises at 9:30 o'clock every morning and retires at 9.

Surely in Hard Luck

The prize example of hard luck we think is illustrated in the following episode: August Winkler was burned out in Wisconsin recently and started south to regain his fortune. On his way there his wife died. He started in business, and the Mississippi flood wiped him out. He went to Kansas, arriving at Rossville with his flivver and $165 n cash. He put the cash in the Rossville bank, and the bank failed the following day.—The Outlook.

Couldn't Lose

The late Judge Reeve assigned a major portion of misdemeanors to lack of will power. "Circumstances govern most of the cases," he once said, "and the only way most people resist temptation is to avoid it.

"Like the man who was an inveterate card player.

"'Have you had any luck at cards lately?' a friend asked him.

"'You bet! I haven't been able to get into a game for a month!'"

Wind

John Halkett, president of the building trades council, was discussing in New York the three-cornered wrangle between Italy, Yugo-Slavia and Albania.

"They talk a lot," he ended, "but nothing will happen. Talk, talk, talk."

And then Mr. Halkett smiled and said:

"Windy people never come to blows."

Some kinds of mayflies emerge as winged insects one evening and end their careers before sun-up the next morning.

Camel

Made for one purpose —to promote pleasure

Camel is attuned to the mood of the smoker who seeks pleasures rather than panaceas. Offered as a cheer not as a cure.

If all cigarettes were as good as Camel you wouldn't hear anything about special treatments to make cigarettes good for the throat. Nothing takes the place of choice tobaccos.

ATWATER KENT RADIO

It has come!

OVERWHELMING demand for Atwater Kent radio brings mass-production prices.

Atwater Kent Radio, because of its obvious and convincing superiority, won universal preference. When America approves, it buys. An avalanche of demand resulted. A two acre factory has expanded into an enormous plant covering fifteen and one-half acres.

As the great staff of Atwater Kent experimental engineers and radio scientists perfected one startling improvement after another, keeping Atwater Kent Radio always ahead in supremely satisfactory performance, the price-reducing power of mass production kept pace.

Now, Atwater Kent Radio, recognized the world over as the highest development of radio, is offered at prices which pass on to the public savings achieved by scientific manufacture on a gigantic scale.

Few Years of Poverty in Victor Hugo's Life

Unlike many great writers, Victor Hugo had a happy childhood; was a brilliant pupil, and when he fell in love, at an early age, he did not become dreamy and impractical, but worked harder than ever to achieve success.

His first experience of real tragedy came with the death of his mother. His relationship with her had been unusually intimate and tender. For several years the mother had been estranged from her husband, which had resulted in drawing her closer to her youngest son. Soon after his mother's death his father married the woman who had caused the estrangement.

The elder Hugo had no sympathy with his son's desire to write. He offered him a sufficient allowance if he would give up authorship and devote himself to a career that promised a large income. Hugo indignantly refused, and shared a Paris attic with his cousin. Here he gained the knowledge of poverty that he revealed in "Les Miserables." But he was not as poor as many young geniuses have been, nor did he know poverty for any great length of time. In 1822 he married the girl with whom he had fallen in love when he was seventeen, and this brought a reconciliation with his father.—Kansas City Times.

The Bum

An American visitor to London, in his reverence for Francis Thompson's poems, made a pilgrimage recently to the Skiddaw Arms, Kilburn, the "pub" where the author of the "Hound of Heaven" used to sit and dream by the fire in the saloon bar. The pilgrim recalled its Francis Thompson's associations to the landlord of the inn, who had never heard of him.

"Poet!" said Boniface decisively; "that sort of a customer hanging about doesn't do a house any good."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Jury Scandal Causes Mistrial in the Falls-Sinclair Case.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

MISTRIAL in the case against Albert B. Fall and Harry Sinclair in Washington was declared by Justice Siddons and the jury was discharged, because of alleged attempts to fix one or more of the jurors and because they all had been subjected to shadowing by operatives of a detective agency. Both the prosecution and the defense agreed that a continuation of the trial with the present jury was improper. The grand jury immediately began investigation of the matter and it was expected that several indictments would be returned.

The fixing charges were based mainly on seizures made in a raid on a hotel room where 16 Burns detectives assigned to shadow the jurors had had headquarters since the trial started, and on affidavits attributing to one juror, E. L. Kidwell, statements that he would come out of the trial "with a car a block long" and that the jury would not agree on a verdict. The raid disclosed that reports were made daily by the detectives to A. Mason Day, head of the Sinclair Exploration company. Mr. Day refused to testify before the grand jury on the ground that he might incriminate himself. Kidwell, waiving immunity and declaring the charge against him was a "frame up," told his story to the grand jury Fall issued a statement to the effect that neither he nor anyone acting in his behalf had any knowledge of or connection with the alleged attempts to tamper with the jury.

Collapse of the trial came when the government had practically completed its presentation of a strong chain of circumstantial evidence to prove that Sinclair paid Fall $230,500 in Liberty bonds for the Teapot Dome lease and had traced by a score or more of witnesses the passage of the bonds from the treasury of a company in which Sinclair was interested into Fall's bank account. It was thought unlikely that the new trial could begin before January 1, owing to the necessity for reassembling the government's witnesses from all over the country.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY MELLON, backed up by Undersecretary Mills, presented to the house ways and means committee his plan for a tax reduction program, making recommendations that would result in a cut of approximately $225,000,000. His specific recommendations were:

A reduction of the tax on corporate income from 13½ to 12 per cent.

Amending those provisions of the law that apply to the tax on corporate income so as to permit corporations with net income of $25,000 or less and with not more than ten stockholders to file returns and pay the graduated individual income tax as partnerships at their option.

A readjustment of the rates applicable to individual incomes that fall in the so-called intermediate brackets, the effect of which would be to cut taxes for all persons with net incomes of $18,000 and more.

On succeeding days the committee heard from various business groups which urged a more extensive tax reduction than Mr. Mellon recommended, and from agriculture, as represented by the American Farm Bureau federation, objecting to even so much of a cut as favored by the treasury and advocating applying surplus funds instead to the retirment of the public debt. The majority of the committee seemed in favor of the Mellon program.

AGRICULTURAL leaders from the corn belt and the Southwestern states held a two-day conference in St. Louis and before adjourning adopted resolutions strongly indorsing the McNary-Haugen farm relief measure and condemning every one who opposed it. Those attacked by name were President Coolidge and Senators Borah of Idaho, Bruce of Maryland, Reed of Missouri and Fess of Ohio. Presidential possibilities were freely discussed by the speakers, and though no one was named as the farmers' choice, the name of Frank O. Lowden was frequently and warmly applauded. There was talk of a third party, but it was not mentioned in the resolutions.

Besides asking for the passing of the McNary-Haugen bill or one similar, the conference requested members of the house from the West to "insist upon the adoption of a house rule under which 175 members can by petition take any measure from any committee and place it upon the calendar for a vote." This was an effort to prevent the death of farm legislation in the house.

Demands also were made upon the Republican and Democratic parties to carry out their national platform pledges adopted in 1924, with respect to farm relief.

DWIGHT MORROW, the new ambassador to Mexico, seems to be making a good start toward settling amicably the troubles between that country and the United States, and President Calles shows a disposition to do all he can to assist in the process. One day last week Calles took Mr. Morrow out to his hacienda at Los Reyes for a breakfast of ham and eggs and they were said to have spent several hours discussing the most serious questions in American-Mexican relations. Mr. Morrow's exceeding good humor on his return to the capital indicated that the negotiations started suited him, and it was said he and the President would have other informal conferences. It is understood in Mexico City that the ambassador will undertake to negotiate a new treaty of amity and commerce to replace the one rescinded several months ago. Many Americans already have presented to him matters which have been pending since the departure of former Ambassador Sheffield.

AFTER a fight of several years to adjust salaries so they would be proportionate to expenses, the Southern Pacific railroad has won a victory before a Mexican federal arbitration committee, which will prevent workmen from tying up the operations of the company.

The committee issued a decree declaring the strike of the Bolshevik railway union at Empalme, where the Southern Pacific has its large shops, to be illegal and ordering the men to resume work within three days or be dismissed. The decree also applied to the shops at Mazatlan. It authorized the reduction of the working week in the shops to five days of eight hours each.

GOVERNOR ADAMS of Colorado sternly warned the striking coal miners out there that they must cease picketing under penalty of arrest, so the I. W. W. leaders who are conducting the strike decided to abandon the illegal practice. For it they substituted the holding of mass meetings of the idle men near the mine shafts at the times when workers were coming off shift. The operators and citizens objected to this as merely another form of picketing, which would intimidate the miners who wished to work, but at this writing the governor had not stated what action he would take, further than to say that he does not yet contemplate issuing an order calling out the National Guard. In the southern field the operators said many men were returning to work.

JAPAN started off the week with a review of the entire naval forces of the empire by the emperor in Yokohama bay. On board the great battleship Mutsu, the ruler passed through eight long lines of 172 vessels, ranging from superdreadnaughts to submarines and hospital ship and including the new airplane carrier Akagi, displacing 27,000 tons. No planes took off from the latter, but swarms of them from the Yokohama base flew over the fleet.

Comparisons showed that since the Washington treaty of 1922 the fleet is less powerful for offense, but is stronger and more efficient in everything except capital ships and is well adapted to its task of defending the empire. Its light cruiser strength has increased from 127,000 tons to 195,000 tons.

The British government, according to the London Daily News, is soon to let contracts for eighteen naval vessels which will cost more than $55,000,000. These are to include nine destroyers, three cruisers and six submarines. This is part of the greatest British program of warship building since the armistice.

ALL records for traffic and tolls on the Panama canal were broken in October. There were 567 transits, and the amount collected was approximately $2,360,000. These figures do not include naval vessels. Congressman Madden of Chicago has been inspecting the canal and announces that work will begin as soon as possible on the Alhajuela basin project, which will create additional water storage of about 22,300,000,000 cubic feet. This will cost $10,000,000, and when it is completed an additional lock at each lock station will be built at a cost of about $100,000,000.

CIVILIAN members of the Chinese Nationalist party in Canton have formed the first regional government, for the Kwantung and Kwangsi provinces, and announce that, tired of the military scheming and discussion, they will devote themselves to domestic improvement and will not waste the people's funds in military adventures. While not openly severing relations with the Nationalist goverlment in the Yangtse valley, the Canton group declares itself the highest Kuomintang authority and issues an invitation to other Kuomintangists interested in the establishment of civilian rule and not dominated by militarists, to go to Canton and ally themselves with the Canton regional administration.

CHICAGO mourned last week the loss of one of the city's most eminent men, John J. Mitchell, banker and philanthropist. He and Mrs. Mitchell were killed in an automobile accident. Other notable victims of death were Maximilian Harden, German editor and foe of the former kaiser; Archbishop J. G. Hardy of Omaha; John Luther Long, author and playwright; Miss Elizabeth Harrison, pioneer in kindergarten work, and Florence Mills, negro theatrical star, who had become so popular in the United States and Europe.

TERRIFIC storms swept the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland and scores of persons, mostly fishermen, were drowned. The property damage was heavy, being estimated at nearly $30,000,000.

Final figures of the lost in the sinking of the steamer Principessa Mafalda off the coast of Brazil put the number at 314. Of the first-class passengers 55 per cent perished; of the officers, 45 per cent. The crew lost only 10 per cent of its members.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE is making plans for his trip to Cuba to attend the Pan-American congress that opens in Havana January 16. He has named Charles Evans Hughes to be head of the American delegation, the other members being: Ambassador Fletcher and Ambassador Morrow, who will come, respectively, from Rome and Mexico City for the meeting; former Senator Oscar W. Underwood of Alabama; Morgan J. O'Brien, lawyer of New York; James Brown Scott, author of several books on international law; Ray Layman Wilbur, president of Leland Stanford university, and Dr. L. S. Rowe, director of the Pan-American union. To this list the new ambassador to Cuba will be added as soon as he is appointed.

BARON FRIEDRICH VON PRITTWITZ UND GAFFRON has been appointed German ambassador to the United States to succeed the late Baron Von Maltzen. He is only forty years old and began his diplomatic career at the Washington embassy.

An attempt to kill Admiral Paul Konduriotis, President of Greece, was made by a young Communist in Athens. One bullet was fired which struck the admiral on the forehead, inflicting a slight wound.

HOSEA PREACHES GOD'S LOVE

LESSEN TEXT—Hosea 11:1-4:8, 9; 14:4-8.

GOLDEN TEXT—I desire mercy and not sacrifice and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Wonderful Love.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Wonderful Love.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Unchanging Love of God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Loving-Kindness of God.

Hosea's message was primarily to Israel. The nation was outwardly prosperous, for its height of temporal glory was reached in the time of Jeroboam II. (See II Kings 14-20). With this prosperity came luxury, immorality and apostasy. Calf worship and Baal worship were substituted for the worship of God.

I. The Apostasy of Israel (chs. 1-3).

Israel's covenant relationship with Jehovah is presented under the figure of a marriage. Their spiritual whoredom is symbolized by the example of an unfaithful wife.

1. The marriage (1:1, 2).

Hosea was commanded by God to take an unchaste woman to be his wife. While this was a strange act, yet it was right, for it was commanded by God, and its motive was the elevation of the woman to the prophet's moral plane. It was designed to show God's wonderful condescension and love in entering into covenant relationship with a nation of such immorality. The nation had no more to commend it when God chose it than this unchaste woman when Hosea contracted marriage with her.

2. The unfaithful wife (ch. 2).

Notwithstanding the wonderful condescension on the part of the prophet in contracting marriage with this woman, Gomer, the unfaithful wife, departs from him to consort with her former base lovers. This shows Israel's base ingratitude in their departure from God to go after idols. Sore chastisement fell upon her for her unfaithfulness.

3. Illustration of Gomer, the unfaithful wife (ch. 3).

This illustrates God's undying love for Israel. The motive governing the prophet's act was love. God's love for Israel is just as real. His grace will yet move Him to take back that nation to Himself.

II. God's Love for Israel (Hosea 11:1-4, 8, 9).

1. Its beginning (v. 1).

It began when Israel as a nation was in its childhood. God loved the nation even while in Egypt.

2. "Called my son out of Egypt" (v. 1).

God called Israel out of the bondage of Egypt and brought them into Canaan, the land of freedom—flowing with milk and honey. Such love and favor placed Israel under peculiar obligation to God.

3. "Taught Ephraim to go" (v. 3).

In spite of Israel's backsliding (v. 2), God is represented as teaching Israel how to walk, even as a father taking up his child in his arms. God watched over them as parents watch over their children by night.

4. "I drew with cords of a man (v. 4).

Observe that His drawing was not with a stout rope as used with an unruly heifer (ch. 10:11), but a cord such as a man could bear. God's wonderful love in Christ should constrain us to obey and serve Him.

5. Took off the yoke from the jaws and placed food before them (v. 4).

The figure is of a husbandman lifting the yoke from the oxen so that they could eat.

6. Unwillingness to give them up (vv. 8, 9).

In spite of all Israel's sin, God was unwilling to destroy them.

III. God Pleads for Repentance (14:4-8).

Notwithstanding their awful sins, God urged Israel to turn unto Him. He is doing the same to backsliders today. He made promise unto them.

1. "I will heal their backslidings" (v. 4).

This on the condition of frank and full confession.

2. "I will love them freely (v. 4).

This is characteristic of God. Only God can express unmerited love.

3. "I will be as the dew to Israel" (v. 5).

God will refresh the nation as dew does the parched grass.

4. Growth promised (v. 5).

5. Beauty assured (v. 6).

6. Pleasant fragrance (v. 7).

While this is a picture of the restored nation, something similar may be seen in the fragrant, fruitful lives of men and women who have sinned and come back to God.

"Miss Quarrier, you know my wishes. If you choose to disregard them—"

"Mr. Guthrie is an educated gentleman," broke in Joan, "not a cave man. I will be home by ten o'clock. Good night!" And crowding past the discomfited Swan, Joan Quarrier closed the door of the mission in his face.

"It is not difficult to tell who's commanding here," chuckled Guthrie.

"I don't like to humiliate the little man. He means well enough but if they will send weak men to work in this country, and the Oblates strong ones, like your friend, Pere Rousseau, the Indians will flock to the French."

"But Cameron tells me you've done wonders with the orphan Crees."

"Oh, yes! I've been useful to them—that's why he doesn't dare exert the authority which my honorable brother bestowed upon him. Imagine, nursing three years in France, and having Mr. Swan to guide my faltering feet!" She laughed merrily, as they swung through the stinging air of the clearing.

The man beside her was hardly aware of his moccasins touching the brittle snow, so lifted in spirits was he with the nearness of the girl whose strange decision to winter at Albany defied analysis.

"You didn't tell me this afternoon why you deceived me as to your whereabouts in your Christmas letter," he hazarded.

"If I had told you, would you have come to see me?" she asked, turning her hood and meeting his eyes with frank, impersonal gaze.

"Yes!"

"That is the reason."

"You mean you didn't want to see me?"

"I mean that you had your work to do—it would have interfered."

He walked for a space in silence, then turned to her. "You are that kind of a woman—you understand."

"I hope so."

He was thrilled by the thought that Joan Quarrier's friendship was like that. But why had she stayed? Could it be that after the photographs she had seen at Elkwan with their inscriptions, she had stayed nevertheless at Albany because—because what? He could tell her now that he was free, since his reply to Ethel's letter which went out that afternoon to Moose. But what had his freedom to do with the girl whose overshoes crunched the snow beside him?

"I would like to ask you a question," he said at length.

Her laugh rippled on the frosty air. "This sounds interesting, Mr. Exile, but to avoid anti-climax you should wait for our walk back—the moon will be up then."

"The question won't wait," he replied. "Has your brother written you of my engagement?"

"Yes."

"Thank you! I wanted to tell you that it has been broken—by her—in this Christmas mail."

In silence the girl walked, stiffly, Garth thought, watching her with head turned to the river. He looked but could not see her face, buried in the fur hood.

"The reason given was—Ninda."

She turned fiercely questioning eyes as she demanded: "He told your family that story?"

"Evidently," said Garth grimly. If there was capacity for feeling in this girl, he thought, she'll show it now. "My brother has done with me, you see. I've disgraced the family."

"No, I don't see," she said, hoarsely, gazing straight ahead. "My brother has told that story in Montreal—injured you beyond reparation—my brother!"

"I'm sorry I told you," he replied, shocked at the depth of her emotion. "But I wanted you to know that my shackles are off—I'm a free man. I wanted you to know—"

In the tide of emotion which stirred him, Guthrie faltered, stopped. The shoulders of the girl lifted in a sob, as she turned to conceal her distress.

He touched her, thrilling at the contact. "Please—I'm so sorry!" he said.

"My brother!— How low, utterly low!" he heard her say. Then she got herself in hand—straightened, and said: "I will write at once to your brother."

"You'll do no such thing. Do you suppose I'd allow you to soil yourself with this family row? Your brother has unintentionally done me a service, for which I thank him."

Joan's dark brows contracted, as she gravely searched his face. "You—are not joking—you mean it?"

"I mean every syllable of it. Now let's forget it all and get on to the Camerons' before you freeze out here! it's growing sharp," he said, but what he meant was: If you stand there another second looking at me like that, Joan Quarrier, I'll kiss you.

The talk of the factor's was not allowed by that jubilant fur trader to stray far from the mad raid on Akimiski by Garth and Etienne, and the medicine-making of old Saul. From the mouth of Cameron, Joan Quarrier learned the details of the desperate effort to save the trade and its ultimate success.

"Aren't you proud of yourself, Mr. Exile?" she said as Cameron finished, and her patent joy in his success was like wine to his blood. "And Shot, too, he earned his citation—but how gruesome it was—awful!"

As he walked beside her under the frosted stars to the mission, Guthrie strove to shift the conversation to the personal—to recapture the note struck with such poignancy when she learned the aftermath of her brother's story in Montreal, but the armor of her reserve defied him. Baffled by her mood, but respecting it, he asked if he might come to say goodby the following morning, and left her at the mission door.

To the man whose love had been on his lips when his hand touched her shoulder, the new mood of the girl defied analysis. He had left the Camerons' full of what Joan Quarrier had come to mean to him—hungry to tell her there above the white Albany what he had first sensed that September night, caught in the magic of her nearness. Here, on the rim of the world, with only the glittering stars to see, he would have offered the scarred face and the love of Garth Guthrie, black sheep; but she had known his purpose and closed his lips. Yet why, unless the exile up the coast had meant more than a passing friendship, had she stayed on to the drudgery—the unspeakable monotony of the mission?

She was waiting in the clearing when Shot loped up, sniffed, looked at her curiously, then pawed her joyfully with fore feet.

"Shot, you know me?" And she rubbed the ears of the wriggling airedale.

"He has a good memory for his friends," said Garth, as the dog leaped in the snow around the pleased girl.

"I think it quite wonderful, though, that he should remember me. He knew me but five days."

Garth's mouth curled. "His master knew you no longer." And the factor of Elkwan reveled in the slow color that touched her temples—the swift flickering of heavy-lashed lids.

"His master had reason to remember the guests who insulted him in his own house."

"One of his guests," countered Guthrie, "was an angel of mercy. We seldom forget the visitation of angels, do we?"

"And the other—an ungrateful scandal-monger."

"I told you last night he was a blessing in disguise."

She looked squarely in his eyes as she said: "But I did not believe you, Mr. Exile."

With a gesture of helplessness, he insisted, "But how am I to prove it to an unbeliever?"

Her eyes clouded. "Let's walk along the shore," she parried, and led the way, Shot circling her, begging for a frolic.

"You're trying again for the spring trade from the island?" she asked.

"Oh, with Souci there, and the echo of his spirit voices in their ears, we shall hold the hunters who crossed the strait."

"Then Elkwan will have a wonderful year?"

"Yes, the best in its history."

"Because of its new factor."

"Because of Etienne Savanne and Saul Souci."

"No," vehemently, "because you went inland and found Souci, and had the nerve to cross the channel through the ice in a York boat, then took a long chance over the new ice to reach the island in time; Mr. Cameron knows."

He glanced sharply at the clean profile, crowned by a plume of wind-tossed hair. "You're a doughty champion."

"No, I'm only a fair critic."

"May I never have a fairer—nor one more 'unfair.'"

"Unfair? What do you mean, Mr. Exile?"

She had given him his opening. "I mean, Joan Quarrier, that you have shut your heart to the truth," he plunged in impetuously. "I mean that you are coupling me with ghosts—dead memories; that you will not see—understand—" In his eagerness to clarify her vision of him—erase the memory of Ethel with whom, in spite of his denials, he still seemed hopelessly involved, Garth floundered—came to a halt through sheer excess of emotion.

"Can't we continue the good friends we are, Mr. Exile? We need friendship—understanding, up here on this lonely coast., Can't we—like two good comrades—hold to what we have?"

Dazed, helpless in the face of her obsession—her evident conviction that her brother had been the cause of his ultimate break with Ethel Falconer, Guthrie walked on in silence.

"Can't we hold to our friendship," she repeated, facing him, and slipping off her mitten, extended her hand.

He took it. At the raw pain in his eyes Joan Quarrier's lips opened in an involuntary catch of the breath. Her eyes widened in a look of wonder, as if startled by what she saw.

"You know you always will have my friendship," he said thickly. "I'm coming down the coast in February—to see my—friend. May I?"

"Your friend will be very glad to see you."

At the door of the mission, she met his reluctant good-by with a smile so personal—so like a caress that the hand he gave her shook like a leaf in the wind.

"My friend," he repeated under his breath as he followed Shot back to Etienne and the waiting dog team, "my friend—my world."

Hour by hour, over the coast ice, the light sled reeled off the miles. So good was the going, so keen the five great huskies for the trail, that the men left their robes only to stretch their legs. The forty miles to the Big Willow river slid past by early afternoon, and the hungry men turned in to the river mouth to build a fire from driftwood and boil their kettle.

Twenty miles directly across the strait, the gray Akimiski hills parted to form Seal cove.

"I'd give a good deal to know how they took the news over there of the loss of the northern fur, Etienne," said Guthrie, busy with his plate of beans and bacon. "Hello! There's a team coming in over the ice. Wonder who it is."

For a time Etienne studied the black object through the binoculars, but when the kettle and fry-pan had been stowed and the sled cover relashed, two rifles in their skin cases rode by the sides of the passengers.

A mile from the noon camp at the river the sled, evidently headed for the mouth of the Kapiskau, drew inshore.

"A hunter from de Kapiskau. We veel now hear how dey swear on de schooner dis Christmas."

The dog-team slowed to a walk and shortly were within speaking distance.

"Kequay!" called Savanne. "W'ere you go?"

Leaving his panting dogs, who straightway lay down on the ice, the stranger hurried to the sled from Elkwan. As he approached, it was evident to the two men that the Cree was laboring under strong excitement. His sled was heavily loaded and his hard breathing indicated that he had run much crossing the strait. Staggering up, he gasped: "De boat—ovair dere! All gone! McDonal' Ha! Ha! dead—all dead"

"What?" cried Garth, "the schooner's crew—dead?"

"You come from dere—you see dem?" demanded the astute Etienne. A sinewy hand shot out, and gripping the Cree's shoulder, shook him violently.

"You see dem? How many?" repeated the half-breed, searching the Indian's face in an attempt to probe the truth of his statement.

"I see one dead man. No answer when I yell," insisted the other, and seemingly at the memory of the ship of the dead, his small eyes filled with dread.

"What happened? Was this man shot?" demanded Garth, exchanging glances with Savanne.

"He die of sickness—I look an' run. It was ver' bad down dere een dat boat," said the Indian with a shudder.

"W'ere the dogs there?"

"I see no dog."

"W'ere you from?" snarled Savanne, thrusting a face fierce with suspicion, into the Cree's.

"From de Kapiskau. I go to de boat to trade some fox."

"You get dat flour from de boat—steal it!" hazarded Etienne, guessing at the nature of the bulky load on the Indian's sled.

The Cree nodded. "Dey not use it now."

The swart face of the head man at Elkwan hardened into creased leather as he turned to Garth, and whispered: "I don lak dis t'ing. He see one man. Mebbe de oders ambush us. What we do?"

"I'm going over to find out. It's my duty. Boucher will wait for days. They may not all be dead. I'm going."

"Suppose eet ees a trick? Suppose de ones not dead wait for der revanche, w'en we come?"

"We'll stalk 'em and see."

Dropping his mittens and deliberately reaching under his capote, Etienne drew his skinning knife. Coolly running a thumb over the edge, he thrust his face into that of the disturbed Indian while his slit-like eyes snapped as he bit off the words: "You lie! McDonal' Ha! Ha! sen' you to Kapiskua. You spik de trut', or I—" and seizing the Indian by his hood, he made a quack pass at his throat.

Overawed by the fierceness of the strangers, the undersized Cree swayed on his feet, repeating in his seeming terror: "I spik de trut'. You go to de boat—you see!"

"We go to de boat—an' you go wid us," snarled Etienne.

At the words, the Indian's face went gray. "De spirit—I am scare to go back," he protested; but the inexorable Etienne ordered him to turn his dogs and lead the way back.

It was hard on the hunter, if his story was straight, but bearding a waiting McDonald in his lair was not to be lightly hazarded.

"I think the man is honest, Etienne. He naturally hated to go again to the ship. But what could have happened—flu—smallpox?"

Savanne shook his head. Only recently the bay had been swept by influenza, brought in by a whaler, impartially striking down Eskimos, Indians, and dogs, but he was still suspicious of a counterstroke by the schooner people, sore from their defeat, and confidently expected a confession from the dog driver ahead before the dusk caught them. Guthrie, on the contrary, believed that some epidemic, or possibly scurvy, had stricken the crew, and wondered if the great McDonald, in the pride of his strength, had found a grave in the Akimiski ice.

The Indian had seen but one body and fled, so he said; but the schooner had been silent as a tomb. Queer that all had died, so soon. As he left, he had called repeatedly from the deck, without answer, except once, faintly, he had heard something—like the voice of a spirit.

When the Cree had reluctantly cached his load of flour and they started to cross the twenty miles of ice, he begged them not to force him into that grave of white men. The ship was haunted by demons, an Indian from the north had said. They had brought the sickness—were displeased with McDonald Ha! Ha!—and would surely bewitch him if he again went to that ship of the dead. But Etienne insisted that the seeming fear of the Cree was only a ruse to lead them into the trap while he hung back and thus avoided a shot in the back for his treachery.

Opposition to Census Traced to the Bible

During the census taking in Russia, government officials charged with this task, encountered strong and persistent opposition in certain peasant districts against the count. They explained to the authorities that counting the human beings and the horses would bring bad luck and that this was an ancient belief, which had many times been put to the test. This strange feeling of impending danger in the face of counting possessions is not restricted to Russia. Flemish peasants never count their sheep or geese nor any of their personal possessions, in the belief that counting will bring an end to a run of good luck. The origin of this curious belief, that seems so widespread, is to be found in the Bible. It will be recalled that David, the king of Israel, was severely punished by the Lord for his census of the people. The Lord counted it as evidence of pride and insufficient trust in the strength of the protector of Israel.—Pierre Van Paassen, in the Atlanta Constitution.

Mrs. Ira Frey of Le Mars, Ia., writes: "For six months I had rheumatism. I had swelling of the limbs, stiffness in the joints and cramps in the muscles. I suffered greatly from backache. My limbs felt heavy and I had a dragging sensation across my loins. I had a great deal of pain in the top of my head, was often dizzy and had flashes of light and floating specks before my eyes. I had heart flutterings and could not sleep well. My appetite was poor and I felt heavy and sleepy after meals. I suffered from shortness of breath. After taking one box of Dodd's Pills I was greatly improved."

Westinghouse
Farm LIGHT & POWER Plant

Light that Saves ~ Power that Serves

Easy to Own

One of the things that makes the Westinghouse Light and Power Plant so desirable is the deferred-payment plan. You can have the plant installed for a small percentage of its cost, making the balance comfortable.

Easy to Operate

The Westinghouse Light and Power Plant is so simply designed, that anyone, with a few minutes' instruction, can operate it. It can be installed in a corner of the cellar, or in an out-building.

THE money you now spend for kerosene alone will operate a Westinghouse Light and Power Plant. And you get light anywhere you want it by merely pressing a button.

You get power, too. Power that makes running water possible for the bath room, the kitchen sink, or out in the barn. Power with which to do the chores, indoors and out, saving your time and strength, as it serves you faithfully year after year.

Would you like to know more about the Westinghouse Plant? We have a new book that tells the whole story. Want a copy?

THE PULL BROS. ARE COMING TO LYRIC THEATRE

There are more things in heaven and on earth, than there are dreamt of in the philosophy, Horatio, and after witnessing a performance of the Pull Bros, Most Baffling Enter- tainers of All Times, one is compell- ed to exclaim: "Will wonders ever cease?"

Thus while we see a woman cre- ated from a rag and a hank of hair, and suddenly disappear into space in full view of our eyes, again shot through her body by a marked bull- et, or sawed in half by a cross cut saw, also the sword box where 12 United States cavalry swords are thrust through the box while the lady is inside, we know she is human material and so governed by estab- lished natural laws, that this is im- possible Yet, where does she go and how are the illusions produced? That is the question, to solve the mystery of which students will go nightly o the performance of he Pull Bros. and return more mystified than ever, and are compelled to con- fess themselves beatn and acknow- ledge the presence of masters.

Thre is high class vaudeville be- tween the acts; a Grand Free C n cert in front of theatre before the show, of Music Supreme, by Tang- ley's famous Calliaphone, the first new tune in forty years.

This is the biggest and most re- liable two hours mystery attraction extant. Don't miss it at The Lyric Theatre, Garner, Iowa, Monday, No- vember 21st, only. 1tp

Obituary

Mrs Minna Knoke, nee Nuehring, was born on the 19th of October. 1853, t Gross Varlingen, Germany She was baptised in the Lutheran Church. November 6th of the same year.

She was united in marriage to Mr Fred Knoke in the year 1873. This union was blessed with three daugh- ters and two sons. In 1891 the young couple decided to migrate o Americ: On October 26th of the same year they arrived at New York From there they went to Postville, Iowa, where Mr Knoke found em- ployment After two years stay at Postville they moved to Klemme and were located on various farms near here until they bought the farm a- bout four miles west of Klemme. which is now the home of the young- est son, Athur.

In the year 1896 Mr Knoke was accidently killed in a run away, leaving the widow alone with her children During the last ten years Mrs Knoke lived in Klemme.

In spite of her age she was always active and delighted in working in her house and in the garden.

While visiting at the home of her son, Arthur, she took sick, and after about a week's illness died at 6:30 o'clock Monday evening, at the age of 74 years and 25 days

Surviving her and mourning her death are her children Mrs. William Bachman, Klemme, Mrs. Fred Haupt, Glendive, Montana; Mr Fred Knoke, Elkader, Iowa; Mrs. Chas Schmidt, Mason City, Iowa; and Mr Arthur Knoke, Klemme; fifteen grandchildren and one great grand- child

Funeral services were held at the Klemme Reformed Church, of which she was a faithful member, Wednes- day afternoon, Rev Calvin Gross- huesch being in charge. Interment was made in the Klemme Cemetery

IOWA FARM BOYS WILL MEET AT AMES SOON

Special Short Course For Them In December

Iowa farm boys, nearly 800 of them, are going to meet together in Ames, Dec 27 to 30, for the annual junior short course, but this year the winter course will be for boys only, whereas the course for club girls has always been held at the same time as the boys' course in past years The girls' short course will be held next June.

A complee program of class work for the boys is being arranged, but there will also be some fun and re- creation, according to P. C. Taff, state club leader

One big feature of the boys' short course will be the annual livestock and grain judging contest, open both to individuals and teams. Many counties are represented in this con- test this year.

Another feature of the boys' short course will be a conference of boys club leaders.

Details of the program are not yet complete, but will be announced later. The boys will have almost complete se of the college. for their course is to come during the Christ- mas vacation, when the reguar stu- dents have returned to their homes.

When going out after new busi- ness do not forget the two best ways of securing it, viz. advertising and courtesy.

FOOD MARKET IS OPEN FOR BUSINESS

NEW GROCERY STORE OPENED IN KLEMME

The Klemme Food Market Handles Nationally Advertised Goods

Klemme has a new Grocery Store. This week Mr C A Larsen an- nounces the opening of the Klemme Food Market, well stocked with the well known Monarch Brand of na- tionally advertised groceries. Mr. Larsen has really enlarged his fine meat market to include a complete grocery store, and with the combina- tion gives Klemme a "food marke" in every sense of the word. Mr. Lar- sen has everything neatly arranged and George Stokesbary is in charge of the grocery department Read the big ad in this issue and note the low prices quoted for Saturday and Thanksgiving week.

WINNEBAGO COUNTY PROVES VALUE OF T. B. TESTING

County Retested And Only Few T. B. Reactors Found

Winnebago, the first county in Iowa to start the fight against bov- ine ubersulosis and to belome ac- credited, has been retested and re- accredited.

The testing which has just been completed by veterinarians of the Iowa Department of Agriculture, le- monstrates that the area plan of testing is a success in controlling and eradicating tuberculosis.

When the cattle in Winnebago county were first tested three years ago; a total of 1788 catle were found that had bovine uberculosis. Testing was continued until there was less than one-half of one per cent of the disease and the county was accredit- ed

After three year, the cattle were again tested this summer for the purpose of aking out any additional reactors and reaccrediting the coun- ty At that time only 255 reactors were found, or only one reactor where there were seven on the first test three years ago.

Most of these reactors came from two classes of herds. Some were found in herds where the farmers had not proprly cleaned up their premises after disposing of reactors and other herds were found where cattle had been "bootlegged" over the Minnesota line or from other counties which were not tested.

Winnebago couny farmers are planning on meeting this situation in the future. Additional attention is being paid to cleaning up work a- round the premises. Minnsota and the adjacent counties are testing thir cattle. The last retest shows less than two-tenths of one per cent of tuberculosis in the cattle tnd he farmers of the county are determin- ed to keep it that way.

Hancock county is on the list of accredited areas.

USES INCUBATOR TO DRY SEED CORN

New York Farmer Uses Plan That Iowa Farmer Can Copy

Incubators are good for something besides hatching eggs, according to H. S. Ferris, a New York farmer who uses his "mechanical setting hen" to dry his seed corn. He places about 40 ears in the incubator and keeps the temperature at about 90 degrees F. until the corn is dry.

This is a practice which many far- mers could easily follow with profit and The Times passes this along as a good "wrinkle."

Seed corn at its best needs speci- al attention to insure high testing seed Practically every farmer's wife now uses an incubator for hat- ching chickens, or if an incubator is not at hand The Times suggests a brooder house would answer the pur- pose With proper diplomacy the good man of tht house could un- doubtedly obtain the "loan" of the incubator during tho fall.

WILL HAVE SHELTERBELT DEMONSTRATION IN HANCOCK

Forestry Project Interests Many Over Iowa

Iowa farmers are manifesting con- siderable interest in the campaign for the planting of shelterbelts on Iowa farms and many counties are attempting a farm forestry project thru the cooperation of the Exten- sion Service of Iowa State College

I. T. Bode, extension forestry spe- cialist, recently checked up on shel- terbelt projects which were com- menced in Warren, Webster and Story Counties from two to four years ago. Mr. Bode reports that the shelterbelts are making good growths each year and that farmers have expressed surprise at the com- paratively short time required in growing a shelterbelt for a farm- stead.

Due to the success of those al- ready started, Mr. Bode says that interest in the project is being shown in various counties over Iowa. Dur- ing February it is planned to hold shelterbelt dtmonstrations in Han- cock, Kossuth, Warren and Story Counties.

Even Cows Have Rights

Personal liberty and even privacy are dead in this country. The limit has arrived, and if the cow were a mule she would make a kick. Penn- sylvania State College scientists have placed a window in a live cow's stomach so they can watch the pro- cesses by which she manufactures vitamin B in her traveling labora- tory.

A self-respecting cow with a win- dow in her stomach, with no shades to pull down, seems to go the limit in open living. The embarrassment of it should sour her milk. But a cow is much like a taxpayer these days. Theirs not to make reply. theirs not to question why.

Biggest Potato

Uncle Sam s Department of Agri- culture tries to keep track of the wonders of soil production. There s a record of a potato that weighed eight poundsand two ounces May- hap there have bon larger ones, but this is the biggest yet reported. That should make a tuber vaster than Goliah's bean and would make a fair meal if the family was not too big or too hungry.

First Basket Ball Game At Hayfield Tomorrow Night

Thanks to the many parents wh have co-operated in our immuniz- tion program we have been able t justify our confidence in he pr gresive chasracter of our commun ty Practicaly all of the the fr immunizing material has been spok en for, as near 100 individuals hav engaged to be imunized. A few oth ers will begin the treatment nex Monday as they were unable to tak it last Monday. Doctors and nurse will be with us again Monday for the secoud of the three trea ments.

Play Hayfield Friday Night

Our first basket ball game thi season will be played at Hayfield o Friday night Supt Edie of Wesle will officiate We are not able t announce our Coach's line-up for this first game. New players will be needed to fill the gaps left by our last year's seniors and several boys have been trying hard for berths o the team. We wish there were plac- es for all of them. But only fiv can play at a time. Those not el ected to play this first game may be used, however, at later games. The will attend, we hope, and learn al they can about how the game should be played and support those who d play. We anticipate the same hearty support for our team this year tha was given last year's boys. It helps a lot to have good backing and our townsmen shouting for our success Our players are less experienced this year and may not make the re- cord of games won that last year's team made but we believe evry man can be depended upon to do his best and we shall not razz them for a few mistakes. They will be consci- ous enough of their errors.

Third Annual Carnival

The Junior Class, with the assit ance of tho Sophomores, have been very busy getting ready for the 3rd Annual Carnival. Everything will be in readiness Saturday night, Nov 19 for those of our community who wish to enjoy a night with the bloods and can appreciate so wholesome nonsense and hilarity A general program will bo given at 8:00 o'clock to which a general ad- mission will be charged of 10 and 15 cents After the program an op portunity will be given to view the musical dog, interview Madam Tel- ka Enutrof, make some worthwhile purchases at Sam' Store, toot ev- erybody's horn, and if possible evade the police.

Funds To Be Used For Banquet

The whole affair will serve to aid the Juniors in their efforts to raise money for the annual Junior Senior banquet. We wish it were not nec- essary to have the affair on Saturday evening, but circumstances make it almost impossible to have it any other night. We hope the commun- ity will try to be present and forget their whiskers and grey hairs and be kids again. It will, we believe, serve to prolong life a few years.

Thanksgiving 1621-1927

The Pilgrims' First Thanksgiving

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THANKSGIVING DAY is the oldest of our national American holidays—older by a hundred and fifty years than Independence day, older by more than two hundred years than Memorial day, and nearly three hundred years older than Armistice day. For this anniversary dates from the year 1621, and how it originated is so familiar a story to every American that it need not be repeated here except in vivid poetic fashion as given in the adjoining column.

Although Thanksgiving day is now 306 years old, this does not mean that it has been observed every year for that length of time, as is the case with other holidays, such as Christmas and New Year's, which this nation shares with others. In fact, surprising as it may be to many, there were a great many years in which Thanksgiving was not observed, except possibly in New England, where it originated, and even there it was not observed annually without interruption. It may also be news to many Americans to learn that Thanksgiving was not always celebrated in November. In Massachusetts Thanksgiving day was celebrated only eighteen times during the forty-one-year period between 1621 and 1662, and of this number only three of these observances came in November.

How would it seem to celebrate Thanksgiving in the middle of summer? Rather inappropriate, wouldn't it be? And yet four of these early New England celebrations were held in June, two in July, one in August, but the remainder came during months of the cooler seasons. In fact, summer Thanksgiving day celebrations remained fairly frequent until after the year 1700.

Nor were all of the Thanksgivings observed in gratitude, as is the case now, for material prosperity, for bountiful crops, an abundance of food and the like. At least three of the early Thanksgivings in Boston were held to give thanks because the city had been saved from earthquakes a few days previously. Such was the case exactly two hundred years ago when on Thanksgiving, 1727, a sermon was delivered in the old North church under the title of "A Thunder and Earthquake Call to Reformation." On that occasion the minister led his flock in thanksgiving services because they had been saved from death in a severe earthquake earlier in the week. Thanksgiving, 1774, is also associated with an earthquake, although this was less serious in its effects than the first one. And a third earthquake was followed by a thanksgiving and a sermon in the old South church.

But earthquakes were not the only cause for thanksgiving celebrations in the early days. On February 22, 1630, a great public Thanksgiving service was held in Boston in celebration of the safe arrival of ships bringing food and friends from across the Atlantic. It is curious to note that the Thanksgiving of 1749 was held because of relief from the most severe stretch of hot weather that the Massachusetts colonists had ever known. This sultry spell lasted for three months, during which "innumerable swarms of worms and grasshoppers preyed on vegetation, brooks dried up and fishes died in the rivers, which stank so that people in the vicinity nearly suffocated." In 1675 the colonists were engaged in a life and death struggle with the Indians under the leadership of the great King Philip and there was no thanksgiving celebration that year. But at the conclusion of one of the numerous wars with the French and the Indians in 1742 there were two such celebrations.

For more than 150 years Thanksgiving remained as a strictly New England celebration, and it was not until after the Republic had been established that the observance became a national affair. In 1789, just before congress adjourned soon after adopting the Constitution, Elias Boudinot of New Jersey introduced a resolution calling upon the President to set aside a day of public thanksgiving and prayer. It is a curious fact that apparently not all of the members of congress were in a thankful mood at that time. The Annals of Congress show that when Boudinot introduced his resolution requesting the President to "recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging, with grateful hearts, the many signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a Constitution of government for their safety 'and happiness" several members objected to it. One member took the stand that the President had no business to tell the people what they should do, since the people might not be inclined to give thanks until they knew whether the Constitution was going to work or not! More than that, he thought it was a matter for the several states to decide (he was from South Carolina, destined to be the leading exponent of states' rights) and not for congress. But despite this and other objections, the measure was passed and as a result of this resolution President George Washington issued such a proclamation on October 3, establishing the first Thanksgiving by Presidential proclamation on November 26 of that year. It was this precedent which no doubt had most to do with making Thanksgiving a November date.

However, even with this precedent, Thanksgiving did not become an annual event for nearly three-quarters of a century and we owe its adoption, and especially its observance on the last Thursday in November, to another great President, Abraham Lincoln. The summer of 1861 was a gloomy one for the nation. The memory of the disaster at Bull Run was still fresh in the minds of the people and the destruction of the Union seemed imminent. On August 12 Lincoln issued a proclamation designating the last Thursday in September as "a day of humiliation, prayer and fasting." How conscious he was of the need for such a day is shown by the wording of the document:

"Whereas, when our own beloved country, once, by the blessing of God, united, prosperous and happy, is now afflicted with faction and civil war, it is peculiarly fit for us to recognize the hand of God in this terrible visitation and in sorrowful remembrance of our own faults and crimes as a nation and as individuals, to humble ourselves before Him and to pray for His mercy."

As a result of this proclamation thousands of persons throughout the North refrained from food on that day and prayed for the nation's salvation. The regular Thanksgiving celebration of the New England states, and others to whom the old Pilgrim custom had spread, was a rather subdued and quiet one that year. The next year Lincoln issued a proclamation on April 10 asking the people of the North to meet at their customary places of worship to give thanks for the victories of the Union armies early in the year. But during the summer the tide swung strongly in favor of the Confederate armies and again the customary Thanksgiving day after harvest time was a somewhat gloomy affair.

The momentous year of 1863 brought forth three proclamations. The first, dated March 3, designated April 30 as a day of fasting and prayer. On July 15 (following the victories at Gettysburg and Vicksburg) the President issued another one setting August 6 as a day to give thanks at the prospects of peace. By this time the idea of instituting a national day of thanksgiving seems to have been pretty strongly established in Lincoln's mind. The outlook for the Union cause seemed bright and on October 3, 1863, he issued a proclamation which established the precedent for Thanksgiving day, as we now observe it. It was in this document that he used the phraseology which has become so familiar in all subsequent Thanksgiving proclamations by our Presidents. "The year now drawing to its close has been filled with the blessing of fruitful fields and healthful skies, . . . And so . . . the last Thursday in November is hereby set apart as the day of thanksgiving and praise."

The next year President Lincoln, on July 7, by direction of congress designated the first Thursday of August as "a day of national humiliation and prayer." On October 20 of the same year he issued his second and last regular thanksgiving proclamation setting apart the last Thursday in November for observance of the day. Before that day arrived it was definitely known that Lincoln by an overwhelming majority had been chosen to succeed himself. The prospects for an early end to the war seemed more favorable so that this was an auspicious occasion for a great thanksgiving celebration.

By 1867 Thanksgiving day had come to be recognized as an annual event and in that year President Andrew Jackson followed the precedent set by Lincoln and in his proclamation said: "In conformity with a recent custom that may now be regarded as established on national consent and approval, I hereby," etc. From this date down to the present time the custom inaugurated by Lincoln has been observed by every President. So the day of thanksgiving first observed more than 300 years ago by one small section of the country and celebrated at irregular intervals even by the people of that section, an anniversary which gained official recognition only 60 years ago, has become a fixture in our calendar, observed on a nation-wide scale, until with all of the tradition which has gathered around it, it is one of the most important events in the yearly existence of the average American.

The First Thanksgiving

"And now," said the Governor, gazing abroad on the piled-up store
Of the sheaves that dotted the clearings and covered the meadows o'er,
" 'Tis meet that we render praises because of this yield of grain,
'Tis meet that the Lord of the harvest be thanked for His sun and rain.

"And therefore, I, William Bradford (by the grace of God today,
And the franchise of this good people), Governor of Plymouth, say,
Through virtue of vested power—ye shall gather with one accord,
And hold, in the month November Thanksgiving unto the Lord.

"He hath granted us peace and plenty, and the quiet we've sought so long;
He hath thwarted the wily savage, and kept him from wrack and wrong;
And unto our feast the Sachem shall be bidden, that he may know
We worship his own Great Spirit who maketh the harvests grow.

"So shoulder your matchlocks, masters; there is hunting of all degrees;
And fishermen, take your tackle, and scour for spoil the seas;
And maidens and dames of Plymouth your delicate crafts employ
To honor our first Thanksgiving, and make it a feast of joy!

"We fall of the fruits and dainties—we fall of the old home cheer;
Ah, these are the lightest losses, mayhap that befall us here;
But see, in our open clearings how golden the melons lie;
Enrich them with sweets and spices and give us the pumpkin pie!"

So, bravely the preparations went on for the autumn feast;
The deer and the bear were slaughtered; wild game from the greatest to least
Was heaped in the colony cabins; brown home-brew served for wine;
And the plum and the grape of the forest for orange and peach and pine.

At length came the day appointed; the snow had begun to fall
But the clang from the meeting-house belfry rang merrily over all,
And summoned the folk of Plymouth, who hastened with glad accord
To listen to Elder Brewster as he fervently thanked the Lord.

In his seat sate Governor Bradford; men, matrons and maidens fair;
Miles Standish and all of his soldiers with corselet and sword, were there;
And sobbing and tears and gladness had each in its turn the sway,
For the grave of the sweet Rose Standish o'ershadowed Thanksgiving day.

And when Massasoit, the Sachem, sate down with his hundred braves,
And ate of the varied riches of gardens and woods and waves,
And looked on the granaried harvest—with a blow on his brawny chest
He muttered, "The good Great Spirit loves His white children best."

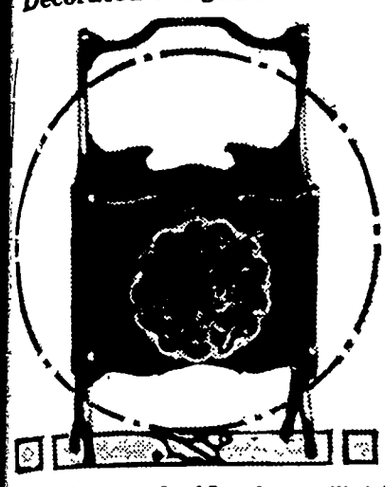
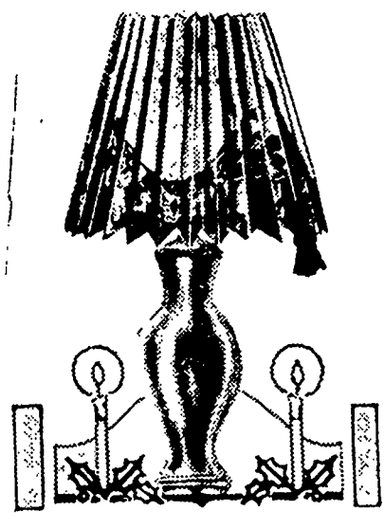
What to Give at Christmas Time

Decorated Magazine Rack



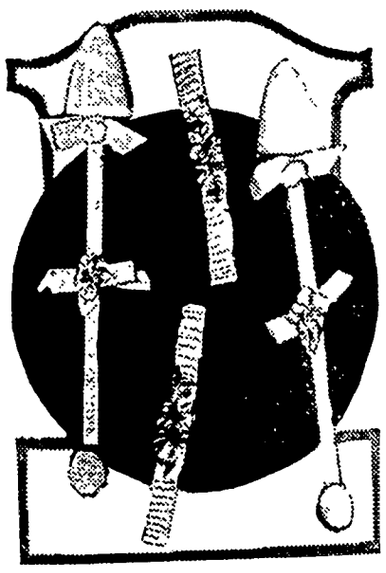
There's no end of handsome Christmas presents to be made which are sealing-wax painted. For example, here is this decorative magazine or newspaper rack, so charming for the living room. You buy the simple wooden frame, then paint it with sealing wax which has been dissolved in denatured alcohol. The color scheme for the rack pictured is geranium red for the outside, black for the inside. The flower is cut out of "illustrated" crepe paper and pasted on. And listen to this—the ornamental border design is the edge of a gold lace paper doilie—the center being cut away. It is gued on, then together with the flower it is gone over with transparent dissolved amber sealing wax.

Plaited Parchment Shades



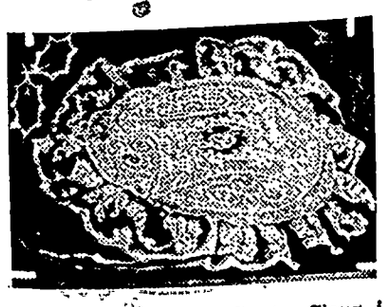
Santa Claus and his reindeers will have to work overtime to deliver the many sleigh loads of painted parchment lamp shades which are now "in the making." Clever women are buying these plaited shades undecorated, so as to give them the personal touch of hand embellishment. Many are "saying it" with "scissors painting." One uses scissors instead of a brush, cutting out pictures from decorative crepe paper. These are then carefully pasted on the shade and finally gone over with a coat of transparent amber sealing wax paint. The finished work looks like genuine hand painting.

Christmas Remembrances



Among the lovely remembrances which Christmas brings to fair woman, or if it fails to bring, registers disappointment for someone, are dainty garter sets and shoe-trees. Now that the short skirt vogue is placing garters on display, there is a renewed enthusiasm for this item of feminine vanity. Likewise one's shoes must look the prink of perfection these days, which makes shoe-trees a necessity to keep them in shape. The lovely little hand-made flowers which so adorn both garters and shoe-trees, are veritable works of art.

Dainty Handkerchief Case



Remembering that Santa Claus is sure to bring his usual quota of handkerchiefs to every member of the family, a case to put them in is a very timely gift. Aside from its usefulness, a handkerchief case as here pictured adds a note of beauty to any boudoir. There is quite a lace craze on just now for things decorative about the home as well as for personal adornment. These perfumed lace cases come satin-padded in any desired tone or tint.

Use Limestone to Help Yields

Kentucky Experiment Station Reports Gain of $18 per Acre per Year.

The experimental field which the Kentucky State Agricultural Experiment station maintains in Laurel county furnishes proof of the value of limestone and acid phosphate in restoring the productiveness of lands, according to a report of Supt. J. F. Freeman.

On the badly worn soil of the experimental field in Laurel county, corn, soy beans, small grain, and clover, grown in rotation, where unfertilized, have yielded crops worth at present prices about $7 per acre each year for the past ten years.

Increased Value of Crops.

But where land has received four tons of limestone in the last ten years, and acid phosphate at the annual rate of 200 pounds per acre, the value of crops from an acre has been increased to an average of $18 per year. The average cost of the treatment has been $3.50 per acre per year.

Acid phosphate, where used alone at the annual rate of 200 pounds per acre, has increased the value of crops $8.50 per acre over the value of crops grown on unfertilized land. The cost of applying the fertilizer in such cases was $2.50 per acre, which left a profit of $6 per acre.

Limestone used without phosphate has not proved profitable. Largest returns are to be expected from acid phosphate and limestone used together Smaller Amount Is Useful.

Although limestone has been used in the experiment at the rate of two tons per acre, applied once in four years, considerably smaller amounts may be used with good results, according to Mr. Freeman. Where it is desired to get clover with but a small amount of material at hand, a mixture of 700 pounds of finely ground limestone and 300 pounds of acid phosphate per acre is sometimes used. This mixture can be most conveniently applied through the fertilizer attachment of a grain drill at the time of sowing small grain. The clover can then be seeded in the grain.

Direct Application of Farm Manure Is Favored

The value of farm manure has long been recognized and no complaint has been recorded against it, except that there isn't enough of it. This shortage becomes more acute with the increase of power farming, and with more extensive feeding of live stock directly in the fields, says W. A. Albrecht of the Missouri College of Agriculture. The production of manure is limited mainly to the winter season; and even then the manure is too often piled in the open, only to suffer a serious loss of its plant food content. The shortage in the supply, as well as the great loss through storage, make it necessary that these two items receive careful consideration.

Direct application to the field will offset storage losses, but the most economical use can be obtained only by fitting its use advisedly into the farming scheme. The results from the Missouri experiment station give some suggestions which make it possible to dispose of the manure during the winter, or the time of its production, without significant loss, and at the same time give excellent returns in increased crop yields.

Poison Kills Rats

For killing rats in houses the United States Department of Agriculture recommends poisoning by the use of barium carbonate. It should be used with meat, fruits, vegetables, or cereals, and every bait should be put in a paper sack and placed at night where the rats are likely to feed. This makes it an easy matter in the morning to collect all uneaten baits. The other common method of combating rats is by trapping. There are many of the more complicated traps and devices on the market that are useful.

Profitable crop production in 1028 begins with careful seed selection this fall and next spring.

Sweet clover and alfalfa are the best soil improvement crops; they work for you even after they are one.

One reason why there can be no general panacea for farm ills is because most farming represents a strongly localized industry.

Many troubles that poultrymen sometimes think are due to lack of minerals are usually caused by lack of sunlight or the vitamines furnished in codliver oil.

Great Emotional Role Long Without Friends

The role that is now considered by most actresses to be the world's greatest emotional part—Camille—once went begging for some one to play it, points out a noted actress in an article in Liberty. "When it was first written the part was refused by every actress in Paris," the writer explains. "Then, after it had gone begging for months, it was picked up and played by Madame Eugenie Doche, who needed a part very badly because she had been ill and off the stage for a long time. So Madame Doche goes down in history as the first to play Camille.

"Since then," the writer continues, "it is probably true that Camille has been played by more and greater actresses than any other role in the world. It was the part that won Sarah Bernhardt her first universal praise. Eleanora Duse played the part to cheers and tears, although quite differently. And there were so many others—Helena Modjeska, Clara Morris, Rejane, Fanny Davenport, Nance O'Neill, Olga Nethersole, Margaret Anglin, Ethel Barrymore. No wonder that Camille has been called the world's greatest emotional role."

"Secular" Music

The Latin word from which this term is taken simply means "age," as when we speak of something going on "from age to age." In this way it applies only to the world and to worldly things. Thus in one church a secular priest signifies one performing his functions while still living in the world, as opposed to the monastic priest, who is cut off from it.

Secular music, then, is the ordinary music of the ordinary world, its opposite being sacred or church music.

Mechanical Painting

Painting mile-long cables suspended between steel towers and carrying electric power across a river near Tacoma, Wash., was a troublesome job until a new device was rigged up recently. Two semi-cylindrical wood blocks with brushes on their inner faces were clamped on each cable and paint fed into them from a fifteen-gallon tank on top. The device was moved the full length of each cable by a tiny car in which two men rode. It coasted downgrade and was pulled upgrade on the cable by a hand crank operating rubber rolls squeezing the wire.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache Often Means You Have Not Been Drinking Enough Water

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean you have been eating foods which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of soft water.

MUCH BAD GAS SOLD IN THE STATE OF IOWA

Need Of A Uniform Grade Shown By Reports Of Inspectors

Des Moines, Iowa. November 17 Gasoline which is sold in Iowa, is neither so very bad nor so very good, according to tests of 146 samples that were recently collected in different parts of Iowa by inspectors f the Iowa Department of Agriculture

"Of the 146 samples tested, 85 or 58.8 percent failed to meet all of the requirements set forth in the federal specifications for motor gas oline," states M. G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture. "Thirty-one failed to meet the requirements so far as initial and end point were concerned but only 22 of these 31 samples would be seriously criticized from the standpoint of efficien motor fuel.

"These samples were collected in the home towns of our inspectors and do not cover all the different brands of gasoline," said Mr. Thornburg. "However, I believe that they are a fair sample of the gasoline that is being sold in Iowa and they demonstrate that Iowa probably needs a flexible state standard for gasoline.

"There is no standard for gasoline at the present time. The only incentive for a company to put out good gasoline is their desire for heir product to give satisfaction to their patrons. Apparently this was sufficient incentive for most companies but in some localities, there was apparently a need for a standard as some of the products which were sold for gasoline were either distilled at extremely high temperatures or mixed with heavy distillates, similar to kerosene."

New Kind Of Record

The youth from Duluth who has set out to acquire 1,000 savings bank accounts in 1,000 different places has a more useful ambition than he who seeks to eat the most oysters, drink the most coffee or sit the longest on a flagpole, but he must be making himself into a decided nuisance to a lot of bankers. One or two well-cultivated bank accounts would, in the end, be better for everybody concerned.

Howe About—

By ED HOWE

©, Bell Syndicate. WNU Service.

I lately met a rather noted character who was actually an old bum.

He did not realize the importance of being a gentleman. His ideas were those of an old bum; he regarded eccentricity as genius, and as sufficient excuse for his wasted life.

I do not like old bums in literature, politics, or anywhere else.

I expect men to realize their responsibilities, and meet them with some success

The undoubted literary ability of Oscar Wilde did not excuse him for his disgusting habits.

When a man dies, people should at least be able to forget him, and not recall his immoral atrocities.

Collection of alimony has become a business, as has the collection of funds for welfare work. . . . And the collection of alimony has ruined many a useful business concern; as has welfare work. I know half a dozen business concerns that have been crippled by welfare work; by members of the firm engaging in it, in addition to giving too much, at the instigation of professionals. A business man who engages in welfare work not only causes his neighbors to hate him, and trade elsewhere, but he neglects his business.

We cannot possibly accomplish every reform recommended. Of the dozens we are told are necessary to save civilization, what are most important? I should say that as important as any is convincing yourself, and others when possible, that there is nothing in the old preaching that pleasure is found only in the broad road that leads to ruin. That is the most mischievous, untruthful doctrine that can be taught. The greatest pleasures are found in amounting to something; in the esteem of friends, neighbors. The unsuccessful, unreliable know little joy or content. There can be no pleasure in being chased by collectors, policemen, or lectured by charity workers.

A certain expert travels about to doctor sick business houses; he tells me the trouble almost invariably is bad management of sons and sons-in-laws, and the clamor of widows for incomes.

The country is full of business houses founded by hard-working and capable men. Now their concerns are in charge of sons and sons-in-law who have had little training except in college, golf, tennis or society, and widows demanding dividends.

When you're having a good time, you are not accomplishing anything else, unless it is accumulating a bust head for next day.

I often hear that the young of the present generation have more problems to meet than I had

There are no new problems; there has not been a new one in a hundred years.

Whether one eats from silver or pewter, he must not eat too much.

Whether a man rides in airplane, automobile or buggy, he must watch out.

I remember that in the old-horse-and-buggy days, the horse occasionally got the lines under his tail, and ran away.

I was lately talking with a cattle man in Texas, and he told me that seven-tenths of men of his calling became bankrupt in the hard times following the war. I asked him what per cent of bankers went broke as a result of standing by the cattle men. He thought awhile, and expressed the opinion it was about seven-tenths, also. Are bankers as much devoted to the interests of their communities as they should be, and sometimes a little more?

* * *

We hear of degrees in a college, some of greater importance than others. Likewise in life there are studies of more practical use and importance than others. First of all is industry. Theodore Roosevelt had a habit of saying good things; one of his best was that in all history no idler is mentioned as worthily distinguished. After industry comes fairness, politeness, the accumulation of useful knowledge, good reputation, and a willingness to assist in such charity and progress as ordinary men find profitable and possible.

A strong impression in my late years is I have never known anyone to take care of himself as well as he might have done; there are always shots in every man's locker he has not used in his fight with life. He will usually assist in efforts to save the world, by means of religion or politics, and neglect himself. A man's big problem is himself, and it is usually the problem he neglects most.

* * *

Old Silerius, the Roman, said the best way to convince a man is to present the facts in a simple, logical way; the best way to convince a woman, to lie to her.

* * *

The duties of a good man are easier and pleasanter than those of a bad man. Idleness is finally a greater task than productive and good work

1—Retiring President G. E. NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Election Day Results in New York, Detroit and Elsewhere.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GOV. AL SMITH'S stock as a Presidential nominee possibility, already pretty high, took quite a jump as a result of the elections in New York state. The Democratic organizations elected nearly all their candidates in the metropolitan district, but the party's biggest victory was in the vote on the nine proposed constitutional amendments. The governor opposed the sixth of these, to lengthen the term of the governor to four years and hold the state elections in Presidential years, and this was defeated by a huge majority. The other eight proposed amendments, all supported by Smith, went over by big votes. One of them raises the debt limit of New York city so that additional bonds for $300,000,000 may be issued for new subway construction. The adoption of this was considered a personal victory for Mayor Walker.

Detroit's exciting mayoralty election resulted in the defeat of Mayor John W. Smith, an avowed enemy of prohibition, by John C. Lodge, the candidate of the Anti-Saloon league and other reform organizations on a bone dry program. However, the glee of the drys was somewhat tempered when Mr. Lodge, who had maintained silence during the campaign, asserted that he was absolutely free from obligations and pledges, and continued:

"This wet and dry matter was dragged into the campaign. It was never an issue. We can have orderly law enforcement without asking the aid or advice of the professional drys, with the emphasis on 'professional.' There will be positively no 'snooping.'"

In Ohio the Anti-Saloon league met with defeat when the voters rejected the Marshall bill which would place justices of the peace on a fee salary basis and thereby give them authority to hear and decide cases involving infraction of the prohibition laws.

Lovers of horse racing and those who like to bet on the ponies rejoiced in the victory of Judge Flem D. Sampson, Republican, over J. C. W. Beckham, Democrat, for governor of Kentucky. The winner made his campaign as a friend of racing, and the loser was opposed to it and to pari-mutuel betting, and the Kentucky Jockey club took a most active part in the fight.

Senator-elect William S. Vare of Pennsylvania scored in Philadelphia, where his campaign manager, Harry A. Mackey, was elected mayor, defeating J. Hampton Moore, Citizens' party candidate. But this may involve Mr. Vare in a new slush fund scandal, for the Citizens' party council asserts that the Vare forces expended "approximately $1,000,000" and crowded the polls with watchers and workers, "some of whom not only intimidated voters but doled out copious allowances of $10 notes and dispensed liquid refreshments lavishly." Wherefore the council may seek to invalidate the election.

At this writing it appears certain that James Rolph, Jr., was re-elected mayor of San Francisco, defeating James E. Power.

Indianapolis has a new mayor, who will serve until 1930, when the city manager system goes into effect. He is L. Ert Slack, former United States district attorney, and he was elected by the city council to fill the unexpired term of John Duvall, who resigned after conviction of corrupt practices. Slack at times has served as an attorney for the klan and for the Anti-Saloon league. He is personally a dry. His friends point out he is not a klansman, and that his sole income has always been his legal fees.

OIL is being spattered all over the place down in Washington, where the grand jury is investigating the alleged attempts to fix the Fall-Sinclair jury or to subject the jurors to improper surveillance. William J. Burns, head of the detective agency whose operatives were employed by persons acting for the defense, sought to justify the actions of his men, asserting that the defense had the same right to shadow and observe juries as the prosecution has. An apparent attempt to start a back-fire was the charge made by Burns' men that a young assistant attorney general had had improper contact with one of the jurors, but this fell through. A. Mason Day and Sheldon Clark, Sinclair company officials who were charged with directing the operations of the detectives and receiving their reports, refused to testify before the grand jury as to who actually hired and paid the investigators and what relationship existed between them and Harry Sinclair. Both Day and Clark were arrested and held under bonds. Every Burns operative who was sent to Washington for the Teapot Dome job was quizzed by the government prosecutors in the effort to establish the identity of two strangers who approached Jurors J. J. Costinette and G. P. Grenfall, as related by those two men to the grand jury.

SEVERAL thousand residents of the Mississippi valley, with Mayor Thompson of Chicago and a big delegation of his admirers at their head, went to Washington and presented to the house committee their demands for comprehensive flood control legislation. Mr. Thompson, Governor Small of Illinois, Mayor O'Keefe of New Orleans and a number of others addressed the committee, and while no specific legislative program was proposed there was agreement among the speakers that the federal government must assume complete responsibility for the adoption of a program to avert future flood disasters on the Mississippi. Willingness was expressed for the most part to support whatever program might be recommended by the army engineers. There was insistence that other legislative projects, which might be attached to a Mississippi flood control bill, be kept separate.

While in the national capital Mayor Thompson reached an agreement with General Jadwin, army chief of engineers, in Chicago's water meter dispute with the government.

NEW ENGLAND'S floods, which spread death and disaster throughout several states, are subsiding, but the conditions in the stricken regions are so serious that President Coolidge and the Red Cross were asked to go to the rescue. Bitterly cold weather, impassable roads, shortage of food supplies and threatened outbreaks of pestilence combined to render the situation of the people desperate. About 150 lives were lost in the floods, and the damage to property probably will run far into the millions. Farmers lost great quantities of live stock and in many cases all their buildings were swept away. In cities and towns along the rivers the losses of both lives and property were heavy.

CONTRACTS calling for the construction of eight Atlantic cargo airplanes, similar to the one piloted across the Pacific to Hawaii by Lieutenants Maitland and Hegenberger, have been let by the War department. The planes will cost approximately $35,000 apiece. They are tri-motored monoplanes, with a capacity of ten persons to each plane.

FROM native sources comes the story of the heroic fight and tragic death of Lieut E. A. Thomas and Sergt, Frank Dowdell, American marine aviators who were killed by Nicaraguan rebels several weeks ago. When their plane crashed they escaped unhurt and made their way toward Jicaro, capturing two prisoners whom they met. One of these men suddenly attacked one of the marines with a machete, severely wounding him. The other marine shot the rebel dead, but the other prisoner fled and carried word of the happening to Sandino. The outlaw leader sent a force that trapped the marines in a cave. In the desperate fight that followed the Americans killed a number of the guerrillas before they were themselves shot to death.

SOVIET RUSSIA celebrated the tenth anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution with great demonstrations in Moscow and other cities. In the capital a wild, cheering throng of a million men, women and children marched through the streets, passing before the tomb of Lenin, on which stood President Kalinin of the soviet union. Thirty thousand troops under General Voroshiloff took part in the parade. In Shanghai, China, and Harbin, Manchuria, the White Russians staged counter demonstrations and there were bloody encounters between the two factions, which were finally ended by the consular guards.

SEYMOUR PARKER GILBERT, the American agent general for reparations payments, scolded the German federal states recently for their lax administration of finances, and part of the German press and public was greatly offended by what was considered dictatorial interference. Especially was Bavaria angered, and that state and Wurttemberg threatened to separate from the German republic and join Austria. It developed later that Mr. Gilbert issued his warning at the instigation of the government in Berlin to open the way to administrative reform and financial economies. Chancellor Marx planned a trip to Munich to calm down the Bavarians.

FRANCE has arranged for the disposal of $75,000,000 in government 5 per cent bonds to the Swedish Match company and thus will be enabled to retire the balance of the 8 per cent Morgan loan of 1920. Financiers in Paris believe the Swedish concern expects sooner or later to get the very lucrative French match monopoly. From the start the Swedes will win important commercial advantages by the deal. The French agree to buy millions of francs worth of match-making machinery, which the Swedes alone manufacture, in the hope of trying to make a good thing out of the monopoly, the potential value of which is evident from the fact that everybody in the world wants to exploit it.

GEN. ARNULFO GOMEZ, Presidential candidate in Mexico, and chief of the late insurrection, was captured with a number of his supporters in the mountain region of the state of Vera Cruz by Gen. Gonzalo Escobar. Gomez and his nephew, Francisco Vizcarra, were summarily tried by court-martial and executed. Later several of the military officers who had followed his fortunes were condemned and shot.

Generals Matus and Espinosa, leaders of the Yaqui Indians lately in rebellion against the Mexican government, have surrendered and with 600 of the Indians were taken to Mexico City. The Yaquis were lodged in barracks to await forced enlistment in various sections of the army. The entire tribe will be dispersed in accordance with the plans laid by General Obregon some time ago.

COLORADO'S coal-mine strike seems to be fizzling out, for the men have lost nearly all their leaders. Thirty of them were arrested by the state police in a concerted drive designed to put an end to illegal picketing, and though new leaders sprang up, the men appeared to have lost heart and were reported returning to work in considerable numbers. On the other hand there were stories of plots to storm the jails at Walsenburg and Pueblo and release the imprisoned agitators, and at the former place a mob of 400 strikers attacked a squad of state policemen and severely beat six National Guard officers.

MILLICENT ROGERS, daughter of Henry H. Rogers of New York, who recently divorced Count Salm von Hoogstraeten, was married last week to Arturo Peralta Ramos of Argentina. It was reported the bride received $500,000 from her father as a wedding gift. The couple sailed for the groom's home in South America.

ANOTHER wedding, of more interest in Europe, was that of Princess Anne of France, daughter of the duke of Guise, pretender to the throne of France, and Prince Amadeo Umberto, duke of Apulia and cousin of the king of Italy. The ceremony was performed in Naples and was witnessed by a brilliant gathering that included the kings of Italy and Spain and many members of the nobility.

MICAH CHAMPIONS THE OPPRESSED

LESSON TEXT—Micah, chs. 2, 3 and 6.

GOLDEN TEXT—What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What God Wants Us to Do.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What God Requires of Us.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What God Requires of Us.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Prophetic Interpretation of Religion.

Micah prophesied during the reign of Jothan, Ahaz and Hezekiah, in Judah, but his message largely concerned Israel. He is called the prophet of the poor. He proclaimed impending doom upon the workers of unrighteousness and heralded the coming of the Messiah.

I. Evil Workers Denounced (2:1-3).

1. How they worked (v. 1).

Their evil work was not a matter of impulse, but of deliberate purpose.

(1) It was conceived in their mind. They gave themselves to the devising of wicked schemes.

(2) They worked evil upon their beds. They used the quiet hours of the night while honest people were sleeping for planning ways to work out their schemes.

(3) They executed their plans in the morning light. Having power to carry out their schemes, they did what their wicked minds devised.

2. What they do (v. 2).

(1) They covet fields (v. 2)

In this they violated the tenth commandment.

(2) They violently take fields and houses.

A covetous spirit will eventuate in such deeds unless restrained.

(3) They oppress a man and his house (v. 2).

By house is meant a man's descendants, the inheritors of his property.

3. Their punishment (v. 8).

Against such evil doers God is devising a righteous retribution which will fall upon them with such weight as to humble them.

II. Upon Whom Judgment Shall Fall (3:1-12).

1. The unfaithful rulers (vv. 1-4).

Because of love for the evil and hatred for the good the rulers mercilessly destroyed the people.

2. The false prophets (vv. 5-8).

They served for hire. As long as supplied with food, they prophesied to please the people.

3. The judgment which is to fall (vv. 9-12).

Jerusalem was destroyed because of the sins of the people. Just as the righteous retribution fell then, we can be assured that there will be no escape from the coming judgment for those who destroy the people.

III. God's Controversy (6:1-13)

Wicked men may go on to a certain time with their schemes, but eventually the Lord's requirements shall be met.

1. The hills and the mountains called to bear witness against Israel (v. 2).

The people had turned a deaf ear to God so that inanimate creation was called upon to witness against them.

2. The guilty party left to state the case (v. 3).

The King of the universe abdicates His rights and allows His sinning people to make charges against Him.

8. God recounts His mercies unto the people (vv. 4, 5).

Having paused for the charge and none having been brought, the Lord thrust home upon their conscience the memory of His great mercies.

(1) He brought them out of Egyptian bondage (v. 4).

He has done even more for us who were under bondage to sin and Satan.

(2) Sent before them a trio of leaders (v. 4).

Moses, the lawgiver; Aaron, the high priest, and Miriam, the prophetess, were sent to bear witness.

(3) Turned Balak's curse into a blessing through Balaam (v. 5).

4. God's requirements (vv. 6-13).

(1) The great question, "Wherewith shall I come before the Lord?"

The Jews could not deny the charge brought against them by the Almighty

(2) The complete answer (v. 8).

a. "To do justly." Strict equity was to characterize all their dealings with their fellowmen.

b. "To love mercy." The heart was to be diligently set to do good to our fellows.

c. "To walk humbly with thy God." This means to recognize that we are sinners before God, with no claim upon Him except His pardoning love.

Spiritual Power

Spiritual power is developed in action, just as muscles are developed. The more we try to help others, the more firmly shall we be established and the more we shall grow.—D. L Marvin.

To Regenerate the World

The only way to regenerate the world is to do the duty which lies nearest to us and not to hunt after grand, far-fetched ones for ourselves. —Charles Kingsley.

A Benefactor

A physician who reaches out to benefit humanity leaves a record behind him that is worth while. Such a man was Dr. R. V. Pierce. His study along medical lines, and his knowledge of the remedial qualities of herbs and plants led to the discovery of his wonderful herbal remedy, Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is just the tonic required if a woman is borne down by pain and sufferings at regular or irregular intervals, by nervousness or dizzy spells, headache or backache. Favorite Prescription can be had in tablet form as well as liquid at your neighborhood store.

Not Too Original

A young literary aspirant strode triumphantly into the office of a well-known daily paper.

"Well, did you read my poem?" he asked the editor.

"Oh, yes—long before you did," was the reply.

SICK WOMAN SOON RECOVERS

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"A neighbor advised me to try Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which she said had helped her so much. So I bought a few bottles and tried it out. It sure helped me wonderfully. I felt much better. My work was no longer a dread to me. If I hear of any one who is troubled the way I was, I will gladly recommend the Vegetable Compound to them and I will answer their letters in regard to the same."—Mrs. Bertha Meachan, 1134 N. Penn. Ave., Lansing, Mich.

"I had been sickly ever since I was fifteen years old. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I felt so I could do all my housework and am in good health."—Mrs. Marie K. Williams, Ketchikan, Alaska.

From Michigan to Alaska, from Maine to Oregon and from Connecticut to California letters are continually being written by grateful women recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The Compound is made from roots and herbs and for more than fifty years has been helping to restore run-down, over-worked women to health.

Halfway across, the dusk from Akimiski moved out to meet the travelers, soon to look upon, in the berths of the schooner, death, in all horror of plague-stricken men; or to meet a treachery, as Guthrie believed, too vile for the uses of a fighting man like Laughing McDonald. But the canny half-breed would not be convinced, and the knife, shifted to his capote sash, and the uncased rifle barrel thrusting from his robe, were sinister witnesses to his distrust of the Cree.

The barrens of the island purpled, then fused with the dusk. Stars glittered above the moving teams. At last in the starlight, the black masses of the hills flanking Seal cove loomed ahead. The Indian stopped his dogs.

"Eet ees ovair dere." He pointed to the invisible shore.

Ordering the disarmed Cree to remain with his dogs, Etienne called Garth for a whispered council of war.

"De schooner ees not far. We stop an' tie up de husky. Den you an' Shot go one way an' I tak' dees feller wid de gun een hees back an' we circle roun' de boat."

"All right! If either sees or hears anything, two long whistles. Will they hear our dogs if they yelp?"

"No, eet ees too far."

Shot, trained to silence, would be invaluable in a fight, but the huskies' yelping would betray them, so they were lashed to the sleds.

"Eef we don' see nodin', I mak' dis feller holler to de ship. Den we wait. I tell heem he is de first een de boat, wid de gun een hees ribs. He ver' scare—somet'ing bad here," warned Etienne.

"He's afraid of the devils," suggested Garth, uncasing his rifle, and regretting that his army automatic hung neglected in its holster on the rack at Elkwan. This stalk of the ship had much of the color of a trench raid—a fight in the dark, if Etienne was right—and he missed the feel of his pistol on his belt, the drag on the shoulder-strap of a bag of Mills bombs.

As they separated, Etienne gripped Garth's hand. "I meet you at de boat. Keep behin' de ice w'en I mak' heem holler, eef dey shoot."

The idea of stalking dead men was grotesque, but as Garth and Shot made their way slowly toward the shore, for the stars were dim, the possibility that Etienne's suspicions were not unfounded grew in the mind of Guthrie. Suppose the Indian had seen a dead man. There might have been a fight aboard while the rest were temporarily ashore after fur. True, McDonald might be dead, but with the leader gone, Breault, desperate, sick possibly, perhaps insane, might have evolved this scheme to lure some of the Kapiskau people across the ice. For the Indian was bound for Kapiskau when they met him.

That the ruse was McDonald's, Guthrie put aside, but strange things had happened before among a ship's company wintering in the ice, and who could guess what had fallen out on The Ghost?

When, in the faint light of the stars he made out the ice-sheathed poles of the schooner, Garth patted his excited dog. "Stand to. Shot!"

The airedale stiffened, sniffing the wind, then side by side, man and dog cautiously made their approach. From behind a pressure ridge, a hundred yards from the frozen-in craft drifted with snow to her low rails, Guthrie stopped. There, under the dim stars, silent, sinister, lay the ship. Was it the sepulcher of luckless dead, or—

Two whistles from the direction of the ship started Guthrie swiftly over the ice behind his silent dog. Circling the stern, he found behind a mound Etienne and the shaking Cree.

"What is it?"

"I hear some soun' on dat boat."

"Eet ees de spirit," whispered the Cree.

"We go up an' leesten," said Etienne, prodding the reluctant Indian forward.

Standing with rifles leveled on the plank-sheathed deck-house, they waited. Presently to the straining ears of the men came a moaning as of a creature in agony, to culminate in a crescendo of groans.

The two men peered questioningly into each other's faces. At their side the airedale trembled in a frenzy of excitement.

"Make him call to them," muttered Guthrie, with a nod at the panic-stricken Cree.

The steel muzzle of Savanne's rifle found the Indian's ribs.

In a voice shattered by terror, the Cree called: "Kequay! 'Allo!" But no answer from within broke the heavy silence. They waited. Again low moaning drifted from the deck-house.

"I'm going aboard," said Guthrie, and calling Shot, leaped the rail, followed by Etienne. A door, behind the sheathing, opened to his hand, and with the dog in front, they made their way down to the pitlike blackness of the cabin. The odor of spilled whisky, food—and the stench of corpses struck them like a blow in the face. Striking a match, Etienne lit the stub of a candle he took from his pocket. In its flickering light the two gazed in horror at the chaos around them. On the table, the floor, whisky bottles, empty, half full, lay in a litter of meat and biscuit tins, dishes and scattered food. Sitting, jammed grotesquely between boxes in a corner, a rigid hand gripping a glass, the candle lit the staring eyes and gaping mouth of a dead man.

"Black Breault!" muttered Guthrie. "Died drunk! But that groan! Where are the rest?"

Turning, nauseated from the air and the loathsome spectacle, they found a stateroom. In two berths lay the dead bodies of the bearded mate Guthrie had met on the beach, and a sailor. Then a muttered groan and a curse led them to the adjoining room. Guthrie stood in the low door, holding the candle above his head.

In a bunk a gigantic figure lay in a sleeping bag. Guthrie bent forward, thrusting his arm with the light into the room. The heavy breathing of the bulk in the berth pulsed through the small room.

"McDonald!"

Etienne crowded beside his chief, curious to see the man whose fame had swept James bay. The face was turned from the door and Guthrie entered the room to stumble over a bottle which rolled away, spilling its contents. Then he held a light over the mutilated face.

As the candle lit the russet hair and unseeing eyes, flaming with fever above the shattered face with its red beard, Garth Guthrie stared motionless. Slowly his jaw dropped. As if in the spell of some strange fascination, the grimacing face in the candle light held Guthrie's unwavering eyes. Bewilderment, profound, shifted slowly to amazement—to recognition.

"Craig Galbraith!" he gasped. Then swiftly turning back the robes, exposed at the base of the corded neck a jagged scar.

"Craig Galbraith!—Laughing McDonald! God!—what irony!"

Turning to the perplexed Etienne, Guthrie rapidly explained as he felt for the pulse in a huge wrist.

"Etienne, you and I have work ahead! This is 'flu' or pneumonia. He needs some nourishment—may have starved for days. The bag has saved him—kept him warm with that fever."

"But you nurse heem—dis McDonal' Ha! Ha!?" demanded the surprised half-breed.

"Nurse him!" Garth laughed rawly. "Why, this man took me on his back through hell itself—brought me through a barrage with one of his arms broken and a shot in the chest. He was my friend—my pal, understand?—saved my life! We were brothers—in France! Light the galley lamp and heat some broth—soup, quick!"

"Hees name not McDonal'?" asked the bewildered Etienne, dazed by the swift reversal of the situation.

"No! I never suspected—never dreamed who McDonald was. He was shot in the face while I was in the hospital. I didn't know how bad it was—never saw him again."

With a quick glance of admiration at the gigantic frame of the man deep in delirium, Etienne went to find the galley and start a fire.

Guthrie found and lit a lamp; then poured some whisky in a glass and propping up the head of the unconscious man, got it down his throat. A rapid inspection of the boat discovered a fourth corpse. The Cree known to be with the schooner, and another man, had evidently deserted the dying. The absence of rash on the bodies and faces did away with the possibility of measles or smallpox. It was doubtless influenza, contracted from an Indian or Eskimo, for a warning had been received at Albany from Moose that influenza was again loose on the bay.

Finding the Cree waiting out on the ice, Garth sent him for the dog-teams and leaving the efficient Etienne watching a kettle of canned soup and a coffee pot on an oil stove, returned to Captain Craig Galbraith, alias McDonald Ha! Ha!

Lighting a pipe to combat the odor of spilled whisky, Garth sat down on a stool to consider his problem.

Once after his return home he had heard from the man who had brought him unconscious through that hail of gas and lead and steel, and whom he had never seen since the day Galbraith left the same hospital to rejoin his command. In his letter from Halifax, Craig had refused an invitation to visit Montreal, pleading business, but, unknown to Garth, the giant at whom the women of France were wont to turn admiring eyes, had come home wearing the grin of a gargoyle. Then, like a rifle shot, struck home the realization that the man wanted in Halifax for killing his wife's lover was the man in the bunk. He pictured the agony of him, once called Handsome Galbraith, bringing that twisted grimace back to the wife he had loved—the blind rage, born of despair and shame, that heated his blood on finding her faithless as a woman, and as a hero's wife, for the broad chest of Craig Galbraith, famous in the Canadian corps for his trench raids, wore the bronze badge of the elect—the Victoria cross.

If he died, it did not matter; but if he lived? If he lived, he was a hunted man. Cameron would send a party to Seal cove on hearing from Guthrie of his discovery. The ship and fur would be held for government action. In the meantime what of the man in delirium?

Etienne entered with soup, which Galbraith mechanically swallowed.

"Is the Cree back with the dogs, or did he leave us?"

"No, he come back. I tole heem I would follow heem an' cut hees t'roat if he run away," said Savanne dryly.

"Etienne, we can't stay here. We'll pick up this 'flu,' or something worse. The ship is a morgue. And I won't leave the man who wouldn't leave me." For a space Guthrie puffed furiously at his pipe. Suddenly he slapped his knee. "I've got it! Listen! His heart is strong, and the fever, as near as I can tell, is not as bad as it might be. It's fifty miles to Elkwan. With the Cree's dogs you can make it by daylight. Well wrapped up and bound, so he can't roll out or hurt himself, he'll make it. It isn't cold, and cold air is better than this stinking ship—"

"Let's Go Slow Here!"

Etienne listened as if he thought Guthrie had suddenly gone mad. "But you? w'ere you go?" he broke in.

Guthrie smiled. "I'm going to take our dogs to Albany."

"To Albanee?"

"Yes! It's my duty to report this to Cameron at once."

"De Cree can go."

"No, you'll need his help. I'll pay him well."

"But," Etienne sensed that something lay behind it all, "we tak' dis man to Elkwan an' de police come—den w'at?" Etienne also had guessed.

"At Albany," smiled Guthrie, "I'll tell Cameron that you shot yourself accidentally—bad wound. And I am going to bring Miss Quarrier up the coast tomorrow, to nurse you. She knows all about wounds—and I think—she'll come," added Guthrie quietly.

"By gar!" The half-breed stared at his chief in unqualified admiration.

"It's his only chance for life. Here he would die. The place is infested with germs—ought to be burned. You understand? You start as soon as you can. I'm on my way now. I'll be in Elkwan tomorrow night—if she'll come with her medicine kit. And I think she will—for she's a soldier, God bless her!"

After forcing more soup down the throat of the sick man, he was given a stiff drink of whisky, bundled in fur, bound with strips of blanket, and with great difficulty carried to the sled. Fortunately for Guthrie's plan, the delirium had not taken a violent form, for the enormous strength of Galbraith would have baffled them.

With a grip of the hand Guthrie bade his staunch head man good-by, and whistling to Shot, started with his tired team for Albany. Already that day the dogs had done sixty miles and the forty miles before them over the rough sea-ice, even with the light sled, would, if pushed, bring them into Albany, five sore-footed, stiff-legged cripples. So it was not until the sky grayed with the dawn that Guthrie drove up to the tradehouse at Fort Albany, and feeding his tired team, put them in an empty shack where they might sleep through the morning, undisturbed by the hectoring of the post dogs.

Later, walking in on the Camerons at their breakfast, he told of the stalking of the schooner of the dead.

"Well, that's the wildest tale I have heard in forty years on this coast," ejaculated the factor, while his wife and children sat with awed faces. "Not a soul alive on the ship?"

"Not a soul alive," repeated Garth. "'Flu' and probably the whisky they carried didn't help any. The schooner reeked with it. Poor devils, they must have stayed drunk to ease their misery."

"And the fur, two years' trade, did you see it?"

"No, but Etienne said there was a lot of it on board. Then, somehow, in casing his rifle, he shot himself."

"Shot himself?"

"Yes, in the hip. That's why I'm here." Guthrie took the bit in his teeth as his gray eyes squarely met Cameron's. "I'm going to ask Miss Quarrier to come to Elkwan with her medicine kit. She knows wounds—I'm afraid of blood poisoning."

"But, whyever didn't you put him on the sled and bring him here. She can take care of him better at Albany, and then—"

Guthrie shook his head. "He wouldn't come, Cameron. He thinks he's going to die, and wanted to be with his wife and children."

"Oh, but how can you ask that girl to go to Elkwan? She's needed here. Swan'll raise a devil of a row—has already, over your seeing her."

In the narrowing eyes of Guthrie lurked a glint which Cameron recognized. He had seen it before in the look of men, indomitable, desperate. It startled him, made him wonder—about the affair between Joan Quarrier and the factor of Elkwan.

"Of course, we don't want anything to happen to Etienne," he temporized, "but why you didn't bring him here is beyond me."

"I've already told you why, Cameron." The gray eyes of the speaker were black, as they bored coldly into those of the kindly Scotsman. Ill at ease, Mrs. Cameron went to the kitchen to digest the startling announcement.

"Yes, I know they always want their family around when they're scared. Well, if she'll go, it's her business. It'll raise a rumpus, though, and I hate to have her—hurt."

Guthrie was on his feet, scowling down at the other. "One minute! Let's go slow here! You're my superior, and I had hoped, my friend, but you're on dangerous ground, Cameron. What do you mean by—hurt?"

"There, there, now, my lad! Keep cool," expostulated the older man. "I'm your friend and I'm proud to be. Now you've brought it up, I've got to talk from the shoulder. You don't realize what that skunk of a Quarrier tattled about you—"

"Oh, I know all about that—that sick child who died at Elkwan—Joan was there. Hasn't she told you?"

"Why, of course! But the rest, here, and at Moose—you know them. Swan has made a row because she wasn't sent to the mission, to die."

"What of it?" snapped Guthrie.

"He says you kept her there against her will."

"Nonsense! She couldn't walk a hundred yards without stopping to rest. She refused to come down the coast to the mission—just faded away."

"Mrs. Cameron and I understand, Guthrie. Etienne and Joan told us. It's this white-livered missionary who has made the trouble and if Joan goes with you to take care of Etienne, he'll not spare her either—he'll bust with righteous horror—And it'll hurt Joan."

"Will you call your wife?" asked Guthrie, in a tone brittle like the shattering of ice, the muscles of his jaw and temples working under the skin.

"Why, yes!" replied the factor. "Mary! We want to speak to you."

"Mrs. Cameron," said Garth, quietly, "your husband tells me that it will seriously hurt Joan Quarrier's reputation in missionary circles, if she goes to take care of Etienne's wound."

"I'm afraid it will cause a lot of talk here and at Moose," regretfully agreed the factor's wife. "You know what they are."

"No, I don't know what they are—except this, I know that Mr. Swan must have a foul mind. Of course, he has no head—there's no room under his hat for one."

"He'll surely forbid her to go with you, Major Guthrie."

"Suppose she goes anyway?"

"I don't know what to say."

Guthrie smiled. "Well, would you feel better about it, if I told you I loved her, and have already tried to ask her to marry me—will ask her every day she's at Elkwan?"

The face of the startled and embarrassed Mary Cameron flushed with delight. "Oh, Major Guthrie! I'm so glad—so glad!"

"H—ll! take her up today! I wasn't sure you were serious, my boy, and we think a lot of her," gruffly exclaimed the factor.

Her eyes misted with tears she could not control, the factor's wife grasped the hand of Guthrie with both of hers. "I don't know—she never told me!" she cried, "but I've thought somehow that she thinks a lot of you. I wish you luck!"

So peace was made at Cameron's.

Find New Evidences of Coal Formation

Evidence that coal was formed at the bottoms of ancient lakes, and not in vast swamps or bogs as commonly supposed, is advanced by Prof. E. C. Jeffrey of Harvard university in an article in Science. Professor Jeffrey's studies were conducted on coals from geological formations of tertiary age, which is much more recent than the source of most of the coal in this country, but which supplies remains of plants more like those growing today and hence more significant to the botanist as far as their habits are concerned. Earlier studies of similar coals had disclosed wood structures which were taken to be of cypresses, and since cypresses are swamp trees this was taken as evidence for the classical theory of coal formation. Professor Jeffrey's investigations, however, have shown that these supposed cypress-like woods were really from redwoods and similar trees that normally grow on well-drained upland soils and never in swamps. His conclusion, therefore, is that these coal beds are the remains of great masses of water-logged vegetation washed down from the hills by rivers and deposited in the bottoms of huge lakes.

A woman is the champion "bee king" of South Dakota. She is Mrs. Charles H. Blackwell of Rapid City, who ships 50,000 pounds of honey from her bee farm annually. As a child Mrs. Blackwell was mortally afraid of bees. Seeking a business career after her mother died, however, she invested $75 in her first bees. She now has 375 colonies. Some swarms contain as many as 75,000 bees.

The BABY

No mother in this enlightened age would give her baby something she did not know was perfectly harmless, especially when a few drops of plain Castoria will right a baby's stomach and end almost any little ill. Fretfulness and fever, too; it seems no time until everything is serene.

That's the beauty of Castoria; its gentle influence seems just what is needed. It does all that castor oil might accomplish, without shock to the system. Without the evil taste. It's delicious! Being purely vegetable, you can give it as often as there's a sign of colic; constipation; diarrhea; or need to aid sound, natural sleep.

Just one warning: It is genuine Fletcher's Castoria that physicians recommend. Other preparations may be just as free from all doubtful drugs, but no child of this writer's is going to test them! Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold.

Westinghouse
Farm LIGHT & POWER Plant

Light that Saves ~ Power that Serves

Easy to Own
One of the things that makes the Westinghouse Light and Power Plant so desirable is the deferred-payment plan. You can have the plant installed for a small percentage of its cost, meeting the balance conveniently.

Easy to Operate
The Westinghouse Light and Power Plant is so simply designed that anyone, with a few minutes' instruction, can operate it. It can be installed in a corner of the cellar, or in an out-building.

THE money you now spend for kerosene alone will operate a Westinghouse Light and Power Plant. And you get light anywhere you want it by merely pressing a button.

You get power, too. Power that makes running water possible for the bath room, the kitchen sink, or out in the barn. Power with which to do the chores, indoors and out, saving your time and strength, as it serves you faithfully year after year.

Would you like to know more about the Westinghouse Plant? We have a new book that tells the whole story. Want a copy?

1ST ANNUAL ALUMNI DINNER DEC. 29TH

PLANS FOR A PERMANENT ORGANZATION COMPLETED

Officers Were Elected Last Year To Plan The Work

Last week the various committees of the Klemme High School Alumni Association held a meeting to lay plans for the first annual alumni dinner and get-to-gether meeting on December 29th.

Last year a number of graduates of the Klemme high school got together in an informal meeting and elected officers and committees to carry on the work this year. Clarence Elder was elected president of the Alumni; Dolores Koerner, secretary and treasurer, and Marie Blank, general chairman of the work for this year with her assistants, Bernice Tanner and Bertha Johnson who are in charge of the entertainment following the dinner.

Klemme High School now has a permanent Alumni Association, with a capable crew of officers in command and the success of the organization is assured and it is already functioning.

There are about forty or more graduates of the Klemme high school and with a good Alumni association working a majority of the graduates should be able to get together at least once a year for a good time and to review the good old school days.

The next meeting will be on December 5th and will be held at the home of Miss Marie Blank, their leader.

SHORTER DAYS MEAN LARGER LIGHT BILLS

December Is Darkest Month Of The Entire Ytar

With the approach of winter. the hours of daylight decrease and electric light bills show a monthly increase corresponding to the downward trend that occurs in the spring.

In November, for example, artificial illumination is required for about six hours a day, as compared to only two and a half hours in June, while in December, the month of shortest days, the average is nearly seven hours.

Other uses of electricity in the home may remain the same, but the household electric bill will vary from month to month in direct proportion to the use of light.

Tht average number of hours a day that electric light is needed during the various months is estimated as follows:

January	6.35
February	5.38
March	4.10
April	3.48
May	2.95
June	2.55
July	2.66
August	4.00
September	4.45
October	4.90
November	6.18
December	6.85

Endurance Tests

The tendency of the day seems to be toward endurance tests of every name and nature. Recently a man went 14 minutes without taking a breath. The rest of us are seeing how long we can keep on breathing. Those who stop must be pitifully hauled to the cemetery.

KLEMME TAKES ONE AND LOSES ONE B. B. GAME THIS WEEK

Will Play Swaledale There. Next Week Friday Evening

The Klemme Shamrocks lost their first basket ball game of the season to Hayfield last Friday evening at Hayfield when they took the short end of the 19-11 score.

Coach Heiden has been shifting the team around the past week to find the best playing combination. In the game with Hayfield the first line-up was as follows: West, center; Stokesbary and Nelson, forwards; and Busch and Lemke at gaurds. Hayfield led at the half with a 13 to 5 score but Klemme held their own during the last half and put on a burst of speed in the last uqarter that looked diasterous for Hayfield for a while. The game ended 19 to 11 in favor of Hayfield.

The boys showed up fine in the game, which was the first playing experience for practically all of the team. Busch and West had never played before and they showed up good. Lemke and Nelson had played some last year as substitutes Oral Gibson took the center position in the last half, relieving Wes.

Team Shifted For Goodell

A confusion in dates changed the schedule when Ventura should have played here Tuesday night. However Goodell consented to come over for a game and the fams were given a show.

Goodell has just started a team and this was their first experience in a game. The Goodell boys were good sports and took their defeat good naturedly, although they were far out-classed, even by the Klemme second string men. The game resulted in a 36 to 7 score for the Klemme Shamrocks and made up for the defeats suffered in baseball at the hands of Goodell.

Coach Heiden tried out several combinations in the game. He began the game with Lange at center, Stokesbary and Gibson at foreward, and Nelson, Lemke and West at the guard, and then shifting in subs to the various positions. Lange held down the center position for the entire game and showed up well.

Swaledale Next Friday

A large delegation of fans are expected to accompany the team over to Swaledale next week Friday evening. This will no doubt be a hard battle for the Shamrocks, but with their experience now in two games they should make a showing. Let's go gang!

Corn Borer in 55 New Counties

The European corn borer has spread to 55 new counties in 1927, according to a recent check-up by the United States Department of Agriculture. This year the borer has been found as far south as Pickaway County, Ohio; as far north as Cheboygan County. Michigan, and as far west as Berrien County, Michigan. Berrien County is situated on the eastern shore of Lake Michigan just above the Indiana-Michigan state line. In Indiana, the borer has proceeded westward as far as St. Joseph County. Eight of the 55 counties newly infested this year have been discovered since Sept. 21.

Thanksgiving Day Proclamation

Once more Thanksgiving Day, set apart as an annual festival of thanksgiving for the year's blessings, is upon us. In noting the origin and cause of the early Thanksgiving Proclamations, we find that those of Washington and Lincoln were issued in thanksgiving for some event directly associated with what has since become a vital part of the history of our country. It was not until 1864 Congress finally declared that henceforth the last Thursday in November should be the correct day for a national thanksgiving and that the date should be a legal holiday. This custom has since been observed by every President and yet the only historic reference which we make in our recognition of the day s to the landing of the Pilgrims and their first year in Amrica. But have we only the year 1621 and the current year's blessings to be thankful for? Would we enjoy the blessings of freedom and prosperity were they not the result of a heritage left us not alone by our Pilgrim ancestors but by the pioneers of other periods. There cannot rest on the home any more sacred duty than to honestly and efficiently serve our country and preserve its ideals and institutions.

On this day of days, set apart for the giving of thanks to Almighty God for His divine goodness, surely the Flag, the emblem of reedom and opportunity, should be prominently displayed as evidence of our remembrance and gratitude.

Now, therefore, I JOHN HAMMILL, Governor of the State of Iowa, do hereby designate

Thursday, the 24th Day of November

as Thanksgiving Day, and call upon the people of Iowa to devote the day to public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many and signal favors of Almighty God; especially for affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Iowa.

Done at Des Moines, this 14th day of November, A. D. 1927.

By the Governor:
JOHN HAMMILL, Governor W. C. Ramsay, Sec. of St
(Great Seal of Iowa)

Return Address

Nearly 26 million letters found their wyy to the dead letter office at Washington during the past year. If these millions of letter writers had simply put a return address on the envelope it would have saved many a disappointment and heraache to say nothing of thousands of hours of work in the postal department. Envelopes should have a return address printed to save time and worry.

The people of New York have been buying 700 carloads of grapes a day. That's a lot of jelly!

Inspecting The Chimneys

Chimneys, like everything else, wear out in time and pipes sometimes get into positions where a little extra heat may start a conflagaion. It is a good plan o make a thorough investigation of the chimney and pipes this time of the year. There is no pleasure in cashing a fire insurance policy.

No Safety Zone

Take the country over there is some kind of a traffic accident every 30 seconds. Somebody gets hurt r maybe sent to a hospital or morgue. There is no getting away from it and all safety suggestions are as naught. We are growing worse instead of better and it is merely a question of whose turn is it next?

If it wasn't for the birthday and Christmas presents a man could save a little for the future.

Those dear old oyster supper times are with us again.

Our high school students have been selecting their readings for the declamatory contest work. Several have entered the contest and a good class will make the work interesting for all who have entered. Miss Trumbell has been meeting them together lately for group instruction until their selections have been committed.

Schools will be closed this week on Thursday and Friday as is usual during Thanksgiving time. Most of our faculty plan on being away during these few days and Saturday and Sunday.

Second "Shot" Given

A few more came on Monday morning for the second treatment for imunizing against diphtheria. Next Monday will conclude the treatment for those who began last week and we urge all to plan to settle for the treatmens on nex Monday morning. Our physicians have agreed to a charge of but $1 00 for each pupil immunized at school if paid by next Monday morning. If payment is delayed they feel it should be more. A competent nurse, Miss Richter of Garner, has been employed by them for the work and should be payed when the work is done. We are very glad for the response our parents have given this forward step in the interests of health and the prevention of disease. We feel that altho several in and near Klemme have not yet been immuuized, yet a very appreciable gain has been made against possible spread of the disease in this community. Just as vaccination has made smallpox less to be feared so will the same measures make diphtheria less dangerous to individuals and the community.

We have received bills for the Garner-Clear Lake foot ball game at Garner on Thanksgiving day in the afternoon. Some from Klemme will no doubt got o see the game.

Kerans Boys To Leave

We understand this week terminates the school attendance in Klemme of Verl and Otho Kerause whose parents have moved to Traer. We regret to lose these lads. They have been good students and well liked by both class mates and teachers. Our loss wil be Traer's gain.

AUXILIARY ENTERTAINS KLEMME LEGION FAMILIES

About Forty People Attend Auxiliary Entertainment Thursday Eve

Last Thursday evening the ladies of the Klemme Legion-Auxiliary entertained the Klemme Legion members and their families at the Legion Hall.

The evening was spent playing games and doing stunts after which refreshments were served.

All report they had a fine time and that the Auxiliary know how to put on a fine party.

CITY BOYS ENJOY "DAYS OF REAL SPORT" IN Y. M. CAMPS

Time was when the country boy was inclined to be a bit sorry for his city cousin because the latter knew nothing of the "days of real sport," which only life in the country can give. But it's different now, thanks to the camps which the Y. M. C. A. has established in various parts of the country.

Notable among these are the camps which the Chicago Y. has established for the youngsters who lived in that congested metropolitan area, and in these camps in Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan, especially the two winter camps, they are enjoying all of the fun which only the country boys once knew.

There's an interesting feature article about these camps in this issue of The Times. Be sure to read the "Days of Real Sport for City Boys" by Elmo Scott Watson in this issue.

Senator Curtis announces he's in the presidential race to win. How strange. Most dark horses go n merely for exercise.

CARNIVAL WAS BIG SUCCESS

AN EXCELLENT PROGRAM WAS GIVEN BEFORE THE CARNIVAL

Juniors And Sophs Planned Real Clever Entertainment

So well satisfied were those who took in the K. H. S. Third Annual Carnival Saturday evening that they are eagerly looking forward to the big event again next year. The program and carnival put on by the Juniors, ably assisted by the Sophomores was beyond all expectations of the visitors.

Program Was Clever

The curtain went up and the "Pigmy Chorus" performed to the great delight of the crowd, and from then on the students kept the crowd in suspense and thrills with a succession of vaudeville acts including "Sambo's Quartet," who were coaxed to give four numbers; "An Old Fashioned Garden," in which the Misses Irene Johnson and Clarice Wellemeyer sang and acted the popular song hit, and were called back to the stage to repeat the chorus. The K. H. S Orchestra came in for their share of the program and honors. A lively number was sung by the K. H. S. girls glee club, who have shown remarkable improvement the past year and their number was given splendidly. A play, "When the Lamp Went Out," brought many a laugh and was well acted and read.

Following the stage program the carnival went into full swing with a lusty "ballyhoo" in charge of each attraction and the "hot puppy" and hamburger stand began to pick up trade.

The midway had all kinds of attractions, including The Beauty Parlor, a soft drink stand where one could drink Bee Cider for a nickel Salesman Sam was there with his store. For a dime you could cast your hook in the fish pond and be guaranteed a 'strike," everytime Other attractions along the midway included, "A Bridal Scene," "For Men Only," a freak animal show, "the musical cat," A fortune teller's booth, "Chamber of Horrors,", A trip around the world and a shooting gallery.

A force of "police" locked up wrong doers and reaped quite a harvest of shekels in fines. The candy booth sold out in a hurry and the novelty stand did a great business in tin horns, paper hats and confetti. A rushing business was reported in the lunch stand.

We were informed that over $75 was taken in by the Carnival.

PROUTY INSTALLED THREE LIGHT PLANTS PAST WEEK

Farm Light And Power Plants Work Fine On Farms

The Eldairy Farm, of which R. W. Elder is the proprietor, has recently been equipped with a modern electric light plant, installed by B. L. Prouty of Garner. The plant is a Westinghouse outfit and supplies all the current needed for the house, barns and yard, as well as for providing electricity for any motors in use. Ralph says the cows were a bit excited when the lights were first snapped on as they had been used to seeing a dim lantern in the barn. However the cows have recovered and now R. W. can further advertise his "Eldairy" Milk as being from "contented cows." The new plant is a great improvement and is now a needed necessity on every farm. Mr. Prouty inspected the plant Tuesday and found everything working fine. Mr. Prouty has been busy of late installing farm lighting plants and recently installed plants for Chris Christenson of near Crystal Lake and another for Frank Formanek of near Garner.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Section of Pittsburgh Is Shattered by Explosion of Gas Tanks.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THREE huge storage tanks of the Equitable Gas company in Pittsburgh blew up and an entire section of the city, at the point where the Allegheny flows into the Ohio river, was wrecked. The total number of lives lost may never be known, but it probably was forty or more; hundreds of persons were injured. In the immediate vicinity of the gas works many large industrial buildings were totally ruined, as were a number of tenements where women and children were among the victims. The force of the explosion was felt throughout the city and nearly all the glass in the downtown section was smashed.

Cause of the disaster was found in the blunder of some one who ordered workmen to repair the largest of the three tanks while it was partly filled with gas. One man was using a blow torch when the huge basin, which stood 75 feet above the ground, was blown apart and a great sheet of flame shot a thousand feet upward. A second tank holding 4,000,000 cubic feet of gas and situated about 200 feet away was crushed in, its contents ignited, and a second mighty blaze went up. A third tank, several hundred feet distant, of 500,000 cubic feet capacity and partly filled, was burst asunder by the force of the explosion and its contents added to the vast breath of flame that could be seen for miles.

THOUGH the Colorado coal miners' strike seemed to be slowly waning, the prospects for bloody fighting increased last week. After several days of intermittent picketing at the Columbine mine, the only coal property still operating in the northern Colorado fields, its owners informed Gov. W. H. Adams that the pickets would be shot if they set foot on the property. Machine guns were mounted behind barbed-wire entanglements, and the gunners had orders to shoot any trespassers. A large band of pickets led by a woman were turned back Wednesday by these warlike preparations. Meanwhile the I. W. W., through their official paper, were calling for "all footloose rebels" in the country to flock to Colorado to aid the strikers.

Officers in charge of state police sent an appeal to the governor for fifty more men to meet any contingency. The situation was described as "acute" by William H. Young, a member of the state industrial commission.

Gov. John S. Fisher of Pennsylvania told representatives of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor that he would investigate charges they laid before him of the usurpation of power by coal and iron police and of partiality by state police in the strike district of the bituminous coal region. The committee which conferred with Governor Fisher made arrangements to see President Coolidge at the White House to discuss conditions in the bituminous fields of western Pennsylvania.

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH was the central figure in a remarkable gathering of aviators in Washington. The men, and one woman, who have distinguished themselves by overseas air flights were entertained at luncheon by the President and then went to the Auditorium where before an audience of 6,000 "Lindy" received from the hands of Mr. Coolidge the Hubbard gold medal of the National Geographic society, a trophy that has been presented to only seven other men. Justices of the Supreme court, members of the cabinet, of the diplomatic corps, and of congress were in attendance, all joining in the cheering and applause.

The famous flyers present included Lieuts. Lester J. Maitland and Albert Hagenberger, first to hop from San Francisco to Hawaii; Clarence D. Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine, who flew from New York to Germany; Ruth Elder and George Haldeman; Bert Acosta, Berndt Balchen and George Noville, who flew with Commander Byrd to France; William S. Brock and Edward H. Schlee, who crossed the Atlantic to London and then flew by successive stages across Europe and Asia to Japan.

Capt. R. H. Macintosh and Bert Hinckler, English aviators, started from Upavon, England, in an attempt to break the distance record for nonstop flights held by Chamberlin and Levine by flying to Karachi, India, a distance of 4,000 miles. At this writing the outcome of the venture is not known.

Sir Alan Cobham, with a crew of six and accompanied by his wife, began a flight around Africa to show the possibility for communication between the various parts of the British empire by air.

IF THE story told by William J. McMullin, a Burns operative, is true, there was a deliberate and elaborate plot to frame the government in the Fall-Sinclair case and to force a mistrial. According to his statements he revolted at the plan of falsely accusing Assistant Attorney General H. R. Lamb of attempting to influence Juror Glasscock, and told the whole story to Gifford Pinchot, who in turn communicated it to the government counsel. McMullen was directed to "play along" with the Burns men and to report their activities to the district attorney. This he says he did, and the whole alleged plot was then revealed to the grand jury. That body also heard W. J. Burns, head of the detective agency, and his son, W. Sherman Burns, who declared the story told by McMullin was false. Justice Siddons, who presided at the Teapot Dome trial, appointed a committee of lawyers to determine whether those involved in the jury fixing scandal should be cited for contempt of court.

The government also undertook to bring about the punishment of Harry M. Blackmer, a millionaire oil man, who fled to France several years ago rather than testify in the Sinclair-Fall conspiracy trial. An order entered by Justice Siddons directed Federal Marshal E. C. Snyder to seize $100,000 worth of Blackmer's property wherever it may be found within the United States and summoned Blackmer himself to appear on January 6 to show cause why he should not be held in contempt and his property confiscated.

CHINESE students and workingmen created disturbances at Yeungkong, 150 miles southwest of Canton, making demonstrations against American workers and an American mission. The United States gunboat Asheville was sent there from Hongkong by the commander of the south China patrol. The Chinese military forces arrested leaders of the mobs, but there was fear of further trouble.

The Labor party under Chang Fatfui attempted to seize Canton and there was long continued street fighting. Martial law was declared and the gates of the foreign settlement were closed.

Nanking Nationalists gained a big advantage by the collapse of the radical faction at Hankow and its abandonment of that city. The region was immediately overrun by Kwangsi men belonging to the Nanking party. In the struggle of the southerners with the northern armies the former are reported to have met a severe defeat north of Mingkwang. However, Feng, the Christian general, won a three-day battle against Marshal Chang's forces in Shantung province.

WITH the aid of 102 lawyers, Mihail Manoilescu, former undersecretary of state of Rumania, won acquittal in his trial by court-martial on charges of plotting to place former Crown Prince Carol on the throne. The defense, engineered by General Avarescu, bitterly attacked Premier Bratiano and his policies and the result of the trial was admittedly a severe blow to that dictatorial official. One of the defense witnesses, an eminent historian, declared: "One-fourth of the country is against Prince Carol, but Rumania is 75 per cent Carolist." The government fears an uprising of the Carolists, and hurriedly put through parliament the new national defense act, which provides penal servitude and heavy fines for persons who "by word or deed" directly or indirectly seek to overthrow the present monarchical regime.

MOULAY YOUSSEF, sultan of Morocco, seventeenth ruler of his dynasty, died at Fez, chief of his four capital cities. He was the son of Sultan Moulay Hassan and succeeded his brother, Moulay Hafid, in 1912, holding his throne since 1923 under the French protectorate and residing usually in the French zone. He was only forty-five years old but had been in bad health for some time.

THE British government had rather an unpleasant time last week. Its coal policy was attacked in the house by the Labor-Socialist opposition which declared the government had neglected the difficulties of the industry and demanded immediate action to secure an efficient organization. The Laborites insisted on a reply from Prime Minister Baldwin and would not listen to Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister, president of the Board of Trade. They created such a disturbance that the speaker was obliged to order an adjournment.

In the house of lords Viscount Cecil attacked the government's attitude toward disarmament, and asserted that its refusal to admit the principle of mathematical parity in naval strength with the United States "bangs, bolts and bars the door" against any hope of agreement with America on naval armaments. He blamed Winston Churchill for the failure of the Geneva conference. W. C. Bridgeman, first lord of the admiralty, announced that in view of the situation disclosed at Geneva it was not thought necessary to proceed with the three cruisers originally provided for in current naval estimates and therefore only one would be laid down.

ITALIANS, who deeply resent the new Franco-Yugo-Slav treaty, believe France is arming the Serbs against Italy and have been "demonstrating" before the embassy and legation of those nations in Rome. Dispatches explain that enormous orders for steel, leather and wood are being placed in Germany by the French on their reparations account. The goods are delivered to French agents at the frontier and shipped to Yugo-Slavia. The Germans are delighted over this development as each mark's worth of goods which is delivered to France frees them from delivery of a mark in cash under the Dawes plan.

OUR little tiff with France over tariff rates is virtually ended. French Minister of Commerce Maurice Bokanowski said that the United States had agreed, after the conclusion of a provisional agreement, to study the possibility of a reduction in American tariff rates based on a comparison of American and French costs of production.

ELEVEN cities have applied for the honor of having the Republican national convention next year. They are Chicago, San Francisco, Detroit, Cleveland, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Seattle, Minneapolis, San Antonio, and Philadelphia. The winner will be picked by the national committee when it meets December 6. Just now it looks as if San Francisco would be selected, but Detroit also has strong backing. Chicago is said to have little chance because of Illinois candidates for the Presidential nomination.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, whose duty it often has been to decorate others, was himself decorated Thursday evening in Philadelphia, receiving the Union League's gold medal for distinguished public service and a certificate of membership in the club. The occasion was Founders' day, and the President delivered the chief address at the banquet. Two other Presidents, Lincoln and Johnson, have received the club's medal, and Harrison, McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft were made honorary members.

FOUR men attempted to assassinate General Obregon, Presidential candidate in Mexico, with bombs, but the general escaped with cuts on his face from broken glass of his automobile windshield. Three of the assassins were caught, two being wounded by the police.

Great Turkey Drive Before Christmas and Thanksgiving

When America was discovered and explored by white men, wild turkeys were found in large numbers from New England to Mexico. History shows also that turkeys had been raised in a domestic state by the Aztecs of Mexico at a still earlier period, and that they were introduced into Europe by white explorers and were highly prized as a table delicacy upon important occasions.

Texas is the turkey state of America, producing, according to Earle M. Sage, writing in Popular Mechanics magazine, one-tenth of the annual crop of festive fowls.

The "home of the famous turkey trot" is Cuero, Texas, which is probably the largest shipping point for turkeys in the world. Here also is the birthplace of a unique ceremony upon the last day of the turkey season.

Just before Thanksgiving and Christmas a turkey day is set aside. All who have turkeys to sell drive them to the central market, sometimes for twenty or thirty miles, the flocks consisting of as many as 8,000 to 10,000 fowl. Thirty men drove 8,000 turkeys 13 miles in two days. In a drive of this kind, a wagon is driven just in front of the turkeys and a little corn is scattered to the leaders to keep them moving. Those that become lame or tired are placed in the wagon and hauled to town. At nightfall, provision is made to stop under a grove of trees where the turkeys may roost.

When the harvest festival rolls around, this Texas community pays homage to its most famous and profitable crop and celebrates the end of the season with appropriate ceremonies. The turkey reigns as uncrowned king of the festival, and a parade is held.

Thanksgiving Day

From every open kitchen door
A whiff of fragrance flies,
The aroma appetizing
Of tarts and pumpkin pies.
Above the homestead's shingle roof
The sunset fades away,
And fair and frosty falls the eve
Before Thanksgiving day.

The children and their children, too,
By auto, car and train,
A happy, laughing, loving crowd,
Come trooping home again,
To wander in the woods and fields
Where once they used to stray,
And with the old folks on the farm
To keep Thanksgiving day.

Within the shadow of the barn
The fattest of the flock
By lantern-light is made to do
Obeisance to the block;
And baby fingers, pink and small,
Will with his drumsticks play
A merry measure at the feast
Upon Thanksgiving day.

In honor of the noble bird
That shares the eagle's fame,
Bring out the finest tablecloths
The linen chest can claim,
The best of silver and of glass
In glittering array,
And grandma's rosebud china, too,
Upon Thanksgiving day.

Lo! from the Pilgrims' barren rock,
Surrounded with the snow,
The swiftly passing years have seen
A land of plenty grow;
'Tis founded on the loyal love
That brings from far away
The nation's sons and daughters home
To keep Thanksgiving day.
—Minna Irving in Leslie's Weekly.

Let the Festal Board Sag With Good Cheer

Nothing proves the hold which Thanksgiving day has on the American people so much as the dinner with which they celebrate it. From beginning to end it is American. On other days we may eat caviar, goulash and camembert cheese, but on this day we eat oysters turkey, potatoes, hominy, cranberries and pumpkin pie—old American dishes, all, and invariably cooked in an American way. They are our chief contribution to the cuisine of the world. Then let us have at them without shame. We have much to be thankful for this year: we are at peace; we are fairly prosperous; we begin, after years marred by the passions of war, to regain possession of our better selves; we take our ease, give some thought to the exquisite side of life, and find America once more the place it used to be. To the festal board, then, and let the turkey be made entirely of second joints!

Ideal Has Been Held

The gospel of the first great Presidential call to thanksgiving and national meditation upon new ideals was never lost. Deep in the heart of the nation that was dedicated to a new dispensation of freedom and justice and concord it was planted and nourished, its inspiration growing stronger and more pervasive through the years, its wisdom more illuminating despite the scathing storms of war.

ISAIAH TEACHES TRUE WORSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Isa. 1:1-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—O magnify the Lord with me and let us exalt his name together. I saw the Lord and he heard me and delivered me from all my fears.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Worshiping God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Worship That Pleases God

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Worship That Pleases God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Nature of True Worship.

Isaiah had a long ministry, beginning in the days of Uzziah and extending through the reign of Jothan, Ahaz and Hezekiah. For a history of the nation in this time see II Kings, chapters 15 to 20. Isaiah's visions present the redemptive purpose of God through the consummation of Messiah's kingdom. Chapter 1 is the title to the whole book. It contains the great arraignment of the people for their sins.

I. The Moral State of the People (vv. 2-4).

1. Filial ingratitude (v. 2).

The universe is summoned to hear the Lord's complaint against Judah and Israel for their base ingratitude.

2. Brutal stupidity (v. 3).

The ox and the ass are proverbially stupid, but Israel's stupidity exceeded theirs. Israel would not recognize His right as sovereign, nor author of mercies.

3. Habitual evil doers (v. 4).

They were not sinners in act merely, but in nature and heart were laden with iniquity. By heredity they passed their vices from generation to generation.

II. Their Consequent Miseries (vv. 5-9).

1. Their perplexity (v. 5).

Chastisement only hardened them. Their afflictions were followed by deeper and more heinous sins.

2. Their awful confusion (v. 6).

The calamity which befell them extended to all classes. No one was able to minister to their comfort.

3. Desolations in the country (vv. 7, 8).

Revolts from within and invasions from without left their country desolate. Physical ruin always follows moral and spiritual decadence.

4. A saved remnant assured (v. 9).

God's purposes cannot fail. A remnant was saved in Israel—a remnant shall be saved in the church.

III. Formal Worship Rebuked (vv. 10-15).

Their awful calamities were not due to the neglect of religious rites and ceremonies. They punctiliously observed the forms of religion while indulging in iniquitous practices.

1. God does not need sacrifices (v. 11).

Worship and service are not for God's benefit, but for that of the worshipers themselves.

2. God's attitude toward formal worship (vv. 12-14).

The very rites and ceremonies which God ordained for the purpose of helping men to approach Him become disgusting and irksome to Him.

3. God's refusal (v. 15).

Every act of worship while the heart and life are steeped with iniquity only incites the anger of the Holy One.

IV. An Amended Life God's Requirement (vv. 16-20).

Though the nation had so grievously sinned, their case was not hopeless. In order to enjoy that mercy there must be:

1. A cleansing.

"Wash you, make you clean." The washing by water symbolized the cleansing by the blood of the Son of God.

2. "Put away the evil of your doings."

There could be no cleansing while continuing in sin.

3. "Cease to do evil."

4. "Learn to do well" (v. 17).

One can only cease to do evil by learning to do well.

5. "Seek judgment."

One must not only be upright himself but should protest against the wrongdoing of others. Burdens should be removed from the oppressed. Justice should be done to the fatherless and the widows should be befriended.

6. Encouragement to come to God (v. 18).

Though their guilt was great and the judgment which befell them was awful, God's pardoning and cleansing grace were sufficient.

7. Conditional promise (v. 19).

This means that they could only enjoy good on God's terms.

8. Solemn warning (v. 20).

Rebellion against God brings ruin.

Religion

Trusting God with a sincere and open heart, ready to obey what He suggests, asking His guidance, and ready to take it, believing in Him and simply trusting life to Him—that is religion.—James Reid.

Cost of Discipleship

Christ tells us to count the cost of discipleship, but He never asks us to count the gain. He knew we could not; there is no arithmetic to compute that.—W. L. Watkinson.

The BABY

Why do so many, many babies of today escape all the little fretful spells and infantile ailments that used to worry mothers through the day, and keep them up half the night?

If you don't know the answer, you haven't discovered pure, harmless Castoria. It is sweet to the taste, and sweet in the little stomach. And its gentle influence seems felt all through the tiny system. Not even a distasteful dose of castor oil does so much good.

Fletcher's Castoria is purely vegetable, so you may give it freely, at first sign of colic; or constipation; or diarrhea. Or those many times when you just don't know what is the matter. For real sickness, call the doctor, always. At other times, a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria.

The doctor often tells you to do just that; and always says Fletcher's. Other preparations may be just as pure, just as free from dangerous drugs, but why experiment? Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold!

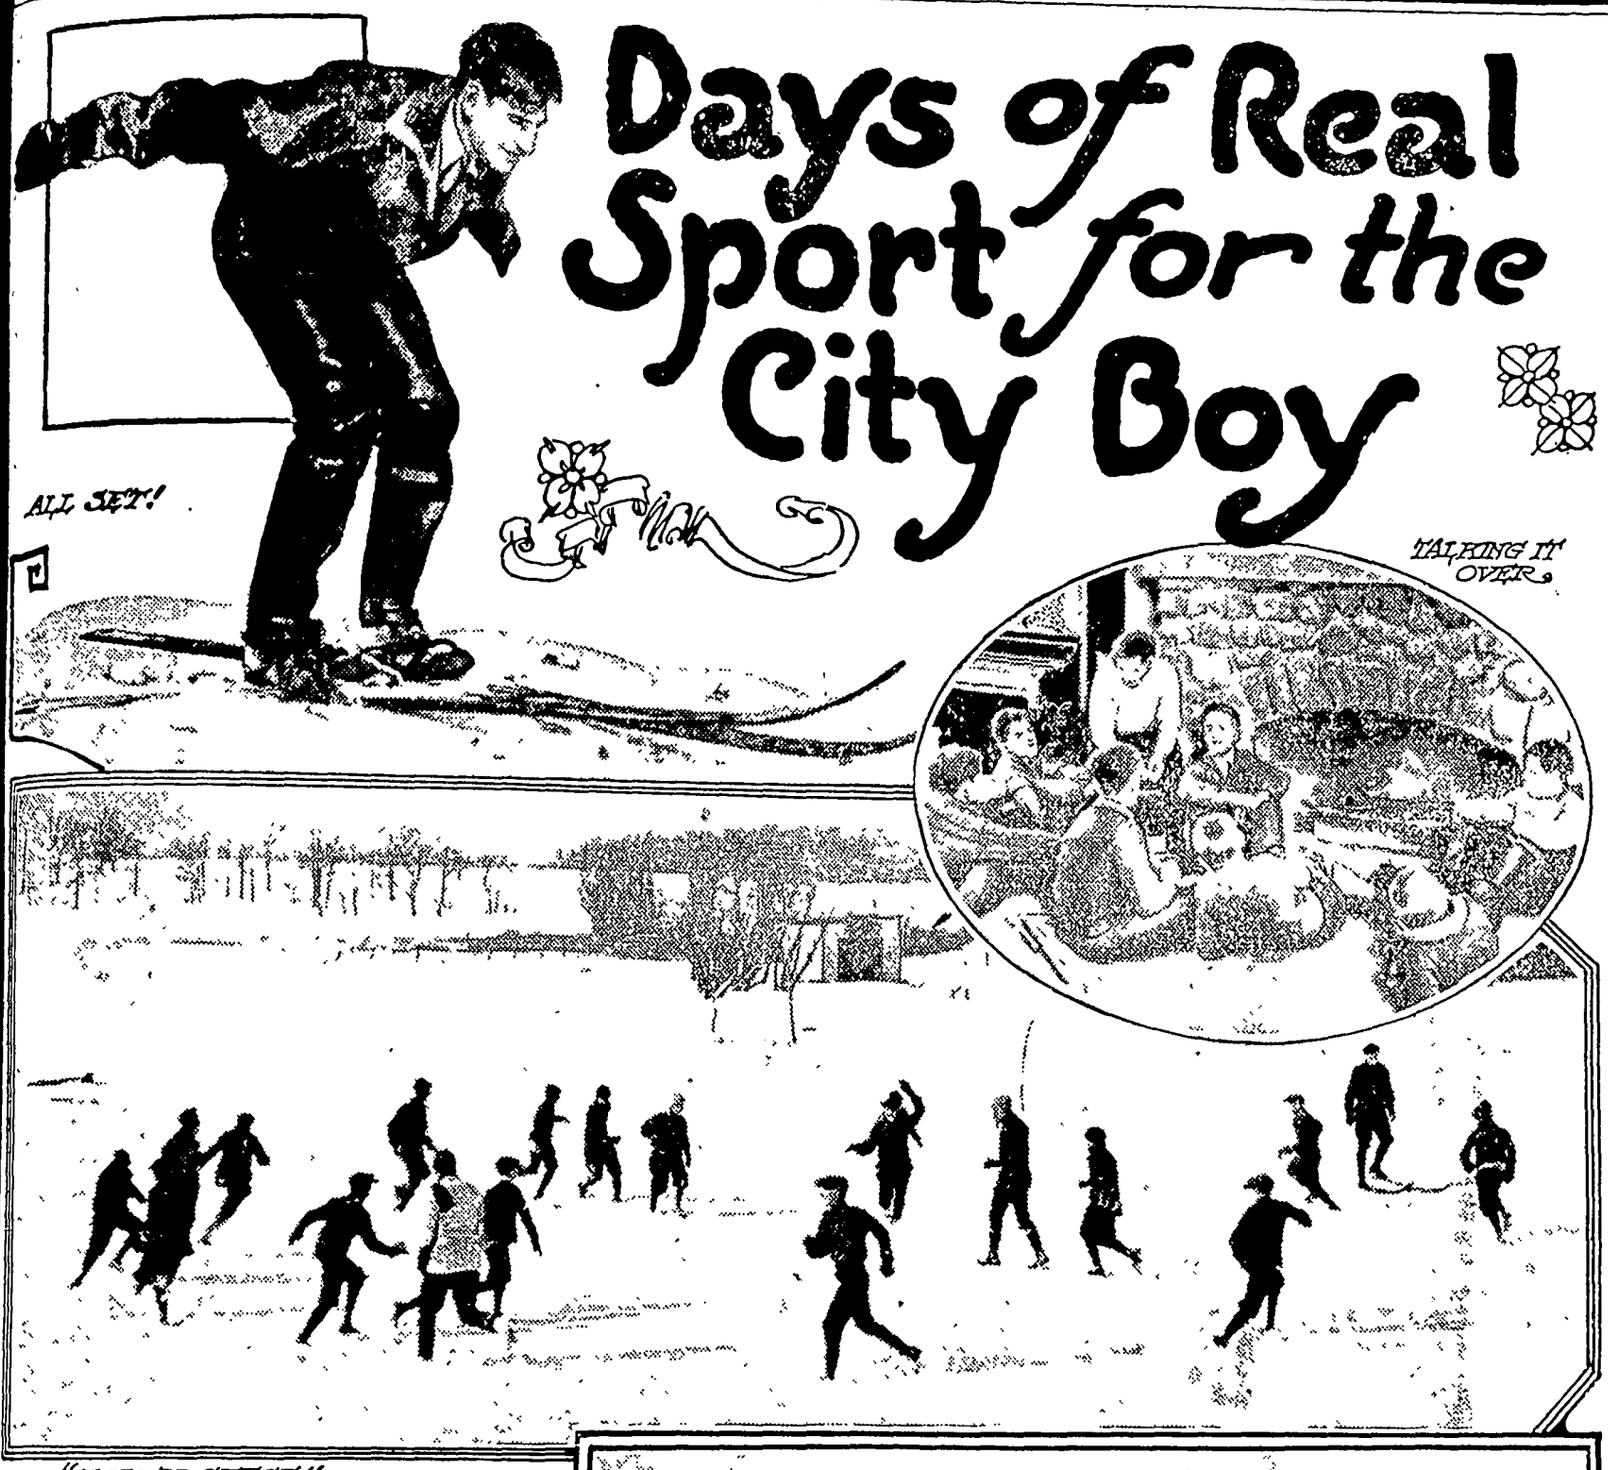
Days of Real Sport for the City Boy



THE ICE DERBY

AN APPETIZER

"FOX N' GEESE"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

TIME was when the country boy was inclined to be a bit sorry for his city cousin because of the latter's lack of chances for enjoyment of the sort of "days of real sport" which only life in the country can give. According to the country boy's idea, the only place in which the "city fellers" could play was the street, and what fun was there in trying to have a really good time on a paved thoroughfare, shut in between long rows of brownstone-front houses? You had to watch out for vehicles of all sorts; if you tried to play ball, chances were that the ball would go sailing through a window and that meant an indignant householder or a cry of "Jiggers, the cop!" to put an end to your fun. How can a boy enjoy himself if there's no green grass to run and roll on, shady trees under which to loll when you're tired, and all kinds of "open spaces" where you can yell as loud as you please without somebody complaining about "entirely too much noise"?

Now, of course, it's true that the city boy has in the past been under somewhat of a handicap for the same kind of outdoors enjoyment that the country boy could have. But there are city parks where the grass is just as green as in the country and where the shade of the trees is just as cool (though it must be admitted that park policemen would look with unfriendly eye upon any attempt to "shin up" those trees). And there are public playgrounds where the city boy can "whoop it up" all he pleases and have all sorts of riotous fun (even though "supervised play" would sort of cramp the style of carefree youth, according to the country boy's notion). In late years, however, the city boy hasn't had to depend upon such limited resources as the city offers for his outdoors recreation. The development of the summer camp idea has been giving him an opportunity to know the same kind of enjoyable outdoor life as his country cousin knows.

The pioneer in the idea of summer camps for city boys was the Young Men's Christian association, which began establishing temporary camps back in the eighties. The plan developed rapidly until today it is one of the most important pieces of work being done by this organization and there are permanent Y. M. C. A. camps in all parts of the country. A newer development, however, is the winter camp idea which gives the city boy an opportunity to enjoy life in the country in the winter as well as summer and if the experience of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. with the two winter camps, which it established three years ago, is any criterion, these camps with their opportunity to the city boy for an outing when the snow covers the ground will be as popular as the others which give him his recreation when the earth is carpeted with green.

The work of the Chicago Y. M. C. A., which is typical of the service rendered by this organization to Young America which lives in other congested metropolitan areas, began with the establishment of one summer camp back in 1900. At the present time it has four camps in Michigan, two in Wisconsin and three in Illinois, a total of nine camps for boys, as well as another for men. The Michigan camps are the following: Camp Channing, on Upper Scott lake, near Pullman; Camp Martin Johnson, near Ludington; Camp Pinewood on Echo lake, near Twin lake, and Camp Wabash, near Benton Harbor. In Wisconsin it maintains Camp North Woods and Camp Nawakwa, both on the Lac du Flambeau Indian reservation in the northern part of the state, and in Illinois it has Camp Duncan on Fish lake, near Round Lake station, forty miles from Chicago, and two camps, the Hastings Lake camps, on Hastings lake, near Lake Villa.

It is in the Illinois camps that the idea of giving the city boy a winter outing was first tried. Camp Duncan was given to the West Side department of the Chicago Y. by Joseph S. Duncan, and it serves particularly the poorer boys of Chicago's great West side. This camp is open to boys between the ages of ten and eighteen, all of each summer, and it is also open during the Thanksgiving and Christmas vacations and the spring vacations for special outings. The boys pay about half of the cost of the camp and the balance is made up by Mr. Duncan and other friends of the boys. The Hastings lake camps were provided through the generosity of A. E. Cross and Arthur Cutten of the Chicago Board of Trade, and Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Worcester of Chicago. It is under the general management of the general offices of the Chicago association. It has a camp director, J. P. Hargrove, who lives there the year round, having boys come to camp each week-end throughout the year.

As the result of the establishment of these camps by the Y. M. C. A. more than 4,000 city boys each year have the opportunity for healthful, wholesome play in a new environment and under circumstances which are particularly valuable in building a finer type of young manhood. In the winter camps their days are filled with all sorts of outdoor sports. They have their choice of skimming over the glassy surface of the lake on skates, sliding down the steep hills on skis or on a toboggan and go whizzing out over the lake, fishing through the ice or playing any of the number of games which a good fall of snow offers. It may be a lively snowball fight in the open or behind the defense of a snow fort which they have built, or it may be he old game of "fox and geese," a game which American country boys have played for generations.

The city boy learns woodcraft, too, in these camps, for when there's snow on the ground they "turn Indian" and test their skill in tracking through the woods. In fact, in a region that is rich in Indian lore there is plenty of inspiration for "playing Indian." A recent issue of "Chicago Men," the official publication of the Chicago Y. M. C. A., contains the following story of how "Young Palefaces Hold Powwow":

"A Indian powwow in camp was enjoyed by 50 boys and their dads from the Englewood, Hyde Park, and South Chicago departments Y. M. C. A., over one week-end at Hastings Lake camp.

"Contests in tracking, running, shooting with bows and arrows, and other sports give a chance for the young bucks to test their mettle in competition with the older and wiser sachems.

"Ten of these young paleface braves competed in an Indian story-telling contest in the evening around the campfire. The old men of the tribe served as judges to determine the winner, who received a genuine Indian bonnet as a prize. Clement Studebaker, thirteen years, 6337 Drexel avenue, won this honor telling the story of Chief Blackbird."

Not only do these city boys enjoy imitating the life of the first inhabitants of their state, the red men, but they also learn how the pioneers, who conquered the wilderness, that is now a rich and thriving country, lived. They hear tales of those brave old days when they gather around the campfire at night, after the day's fun is over, to eat toasted marshmallows, nuts and apples, and the fire is kept blazing with the wood which they have cut for the fireplace themselves. That is, they spend the evenings thus, unless the lure of outdoors is still too strong for them to resist even when darkness falls. Often the boys put up lanterns and torches along the shore of the lake and continue their fun far into the night.

Aside from the chance for healthful recreation which these camps offer for the youth of the big city, there are other values in these Y. M. C. A. camps which are indicated in the following editorial notes in a recent issue of "Chicago Men":

"When a city boy learns to pitch his tent, make his bunk, and fry his own flapjacks and bacon in the woods, the camp has encouraged that boy to develop new qualities of self-reliance that should help him through life.

"When this boy in the out-of-doors hears the moaning of the pine trees and looks up at the great silent stars overhead, he gets a new understanding of the Eternal Creator that he may never get in the man-made city.

"Two Catholics, one orthodox Jew, and a Methodist make a tour of six Chicago and two other Y. M. C. A. camps this summer in Wisconsin and Michigan. One of these men has already spent five years studying for the priesthood. Each rendered a specific service in behalf of these camps. The four became close friends and enthusiastic boosters for the camps."

"ALL SET"—All rigged out in rubber boots 'n' everything, Harry Lazar, a Chicago boy, starts a thrilling ski slide down the steep hill and on to the icy lake at Camp Duncan, conducted by the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago near Round Lake, Ill.

"FOX 'N' GEESE" in the snow is a game that no city boy will forget when he gets a chance to play it where there is plenty of white snow in the country at the Y. M. C. A. winter camp.

"TALKING IT OVER" around the big fireplace in the lodge at Hastings winter camp conducted by the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago near Lake Villa, Ill., over each week end. The boys from left to right are: F. Krlz, 1353 South Komensky avenue; J. Vrba, 1339 West Eighteenth street; R. Lidster, 442 Normal Park; H. Hopkins, 1842 Byron street; F. Krist, 4228 Milwaukee avenue; Dick Wren, 5913 Parnell avenue; Ed Eagen, 6814 Parnell avenue; L. Elbe, 2866 Otto street; M. Johnson, 3834 Greenview avenue, and W. Rosenow, 4228 Milwaukee avenue.

"AN APPETIZER"—City-bred boys from Chicago sawing wood for the first time in their lives and learning some of the experiences of pioneer life in the country while attending a Y. M. C. A. winter camp at Camp Duncan near Round Lake, Ill., during the holidays.

"THE ICE DERBY"—The boys line up and crouch in eagerness for the word "Go!" Then they're off on the ringing steel across the glassy surface of the ice on Round Lake at Camp Duncan.

Don't Trust Your Butter To Luck

Market men and consumers are insisting on uniform color, now-a-days, and no real dairyman can afford to trust to luck any more. Keep your butter always that golden June shade, which brings top prices, by using Dandelion Butter color. All large creameries have used it for years. It meets all State and National Food Laws. It's harmless, tasteless and will not color Buttermilk. Large bottles cost only 35c at all drug and grocery stores.

Noted Star of the Stage writes:

"The life of an actress is one of nerve-strain. If she sings, also, her worries are doubled. Her audiences reflect her moods. If she is mentally tired, she cannot help but convey her fatigue to those out in front and the result is a form of ennui on both sides of the footlights. I have found a sure cure for such fatigue, on the part of the player, is a good cigarette. For years I have smoked Lucky Strikes and the mental balm and real enjoyment I have derived from them have helped me marvelously. In addition they have protected my voice. I use no other brand."

GOLDA MOBERLY WRITES BEST ESSAY ON "COURTESY"

La Vohn Larsen, Seventh Grader Is Second In Writing

Sometime ago the students in the Grammar Room and High School wrote essays on "Courtesy." The students were promised that the best essay should be published.

The best essays were submitted to a judge outside of school. As a result of the decision Golda Moberly's essay is being published, having been accorded first place. La Vohn Larsen, in the seventh grade almost ties with the Senior girl for first place and is given second. Oral E. Gibson's essay on "Courtesy in Athletics" was placed third.

The students may justly be proud of their essays and we hope the community will realize that theey are making practical use of the ideas presented.

COURTESY TO GUESTS

Golda Moberly

When you have guests coming on the train, you will not neglect to have someone meet them, if you cannot do it yourself, and see that their baggage is properly taken care of. If their trip has been a long one, they will appreciate an opportunity to rest and freshen up on their arrival.

To entertain them, you will need not be with thme every minute. Every visitor likes to have some free time in which they may write letters, read or do as they wish. This must be taken into consideration when planning your program, and do not wear them out with the idea that by their actions hey are having a "wonderful ime." It is neither necessary or desirable.

If it is possible you will arrange for them to see the chief points of interest your town has to offer. Do not arrange only for he things you like to do, but consult their wishes frequently. If they prefer outdoor life, do not have a round of dances or shows for them; if they do not care about motoring, d not sugges: long motoring trips.

If you receive an invitation during their visit from a friend who does not know that they are with you, it is permissible for you o ask if you may bring your visitors with you. Or if you do mot think extra persons wuold be welcome, decline the invitation giving your guests as the reason. Perhaps the inviting friend will insist that you bring them with you, and then you may do so.

Do not let children think that, because the visitors read them a story and play some game with ;en they are to feel free to run in and out of their room, whether they are invited or not, and to examine and ask ueqstions about any of their things which they find lying about The children should be taught tha the rights and privacies of others are to be respected. Home training shows up lainly and many a deligh ful visitor has declined a second invitation, because of the c'i oren.

Don't give any of your guests for a going-away present something which is likely to prove more of a burden than pleasure. On the train, there is little room and boxes of candy, magazines, and such things would always be welcome. Try to imagine yourself in the other person's place and do as you wish to have done for you.

Teapot dome has had so much publicity that real estate men may yet consider the possibility of exploiting it.

Thanksgiving Day Greetings

We are really glad of the opportunity afforded by Thanksgiving Day for expressing our appreciation to the comunity of Klemme as a whole, and to the patrons and friends of the Creamery for their loyal support; for the business with which they favored us; for the friendship and faith which have made it possble fo us to look back on the months that are past with the greatest of satisfaction, pleasure and thankfulness for what you have brought us.

When you sitdown to the big feast today and enjoy the fine flavor ofthe foods about you, there is no doubt a brick of Golden Klemme Creamery Butter which occupies an important place on the table. While you are enjoying this delicious home product pause togive a thought that hundreds offamilies in the Eastern Cities today are also enjoyng Klemme Creamery Butter.

It is due to this high class Eastern Trade for whom we furnish a large part of our output that we have been able to pay highest prices for cream at home. The difference gained goes right back to the producer in bigger checks each two weeks. Continue your loyalty and you will be the gaienr. We are thankful for your co-operation.

Doctor at 83 Found People Preferred His Prescription

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice, known to druggists and the public since 1892, as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Then, the treatment of constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions that result from constipation was entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a combination of senna and other mild laxative herbs, with pepsin.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. If grown people want to use them no one can deny them the privilege, but they should never be given to children.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you, and the better for the general health of all. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs? All drug stores have the generous bottles.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

Our humanity were a poor thing but for the divinity that stirs within us.—Bacon.

CHAPTER XII

Garth found Joan Quarrier at the Mission school. Entering the building, he stood for a space in a doorway and watched her read to a group of Cree orphans.

As she looked up, aware of his presence, he said: "It is not February, but I have returned."

"Something is the matter?" she said, apprehensively. "What has happened at Elkwan?"

"Etienne shot himself."

"But you, why are you here? Why did you come?"

"For you."

"For me—to go to Elkwan?" Dazed at the idea, her hand sought her forehead, while the chattering children crowded curiously around them.

"He wants you. There may be infection—and you know wounds—have everything in your kit, bandages, stimulants, antiseptics."

"Let me put on my coat and we'll talk outside," she said.

So they went to the clearing.

"I know well what I'm asking," he said. "It means a day on the sled—discomfort, for you. But he is my friend, and it may mean his life—your coming."

Her troubled eyes turned to his. "I want to go—the trip is nothing. It's going, alone, with you—it means leaving the mission, I suppose."

"Of course, Swan will make a fuss. To him it will look immoral—your going—to save a man's life," he said, savagely, "but for you—an army nurse, with a life at stake," he pleaded, "is there any choice?"

She smiled wistfully as she gazed over the frozen river.

"I've got to go. It's in my blood—to help them—the wounded."

His heart leaped at the words. "To help the strong—to help me—is that in your blood, too, Joan Quarrier?" he asked passionately.

She shivered and avoided his eyes, as a wave of color swept up to her dark hair. "The strong need no help," she parried.

Again in control of himself, the elated Guthrie smothered his own emotion in this thought for the stricken friend at Elkwan, for whom he had lied to the man he respected and the girl he loved. And he wondered what she would say to him when she learned of the deception. That she would have come as readily, had he told the truth, he had no doubt, but the secret of Galbraith's presence at Elkwan was a trust, sacred, inviolate. He had told Cameron that the crew of the Ghost had died to a man. At Albany, Laughing McDonald was a dead man. On the way up the coast, Joan Quarrier should learn the truth.

"Oh, ye of little faith!" Guthrie sadly shook his head. "What must I do to convince you?"

The girl made no answer.

Looking up, Garth saw, bundled in fur cap and coat much too large for him, a short figure blocking their path.

"You are going on this mad journey?" the shrill voice of Swan demanded. "Do you hold your reputation so cheaply?"

"You have heard?"

"Yes! Mrs. Cameron has told me what this man has come for."

"You're too late, Swan, she has promised to go," said Garth quietly. Ignoring Guthrie, the little man gravely warned:

"You realize, Miss Quarrier, if you go, you cannot return to the mission?"

"Yes," Mr. Swan. Before I became a mission teacher, and my moral welfare the object of your solicitude, I lived for three years with wounded men. A man's life is at stake. It is worth more than my reputation."

To Garth she said abruptly: "Come for me when you are ready. I'll go and pack my kit."

"Bravo. Healer of Wounds! That was spoken like a soldier," and walking squarely at the mortified missionary, dazed at the flouting of his authority, who stepped into the soft snow to avoid the threatened collision, the elated Guthrie hurried to the trade-house.

"She'll go, she'll go!" he announced to the waiting factor.

"Good! You'll take good care of her, I know. I wish you the best of luck, my boy. She's a rare one—is Joan."

"Swan told her she couldn't return to the mission."

"A-ah!" contemptuously grunted the other. "We'll send over and get her belongings. She'll spend the rest of the winter with us But she's much too valuable to the Swans for them to stick to their high horse. They'll be over trying to wheedle her into coming back."

"But I hope she won't."

"We'll see to that. Why, they didn't know how to feed a husky pup, and in charge of twenty children! Think of it! Joan turned to and taught 'em something, scientific, you know. Oh, they'll be back after her."

Guthrie grinned broadly as he said: "So will I."

"Well, I hope you get her."

Behind the slab counter Garth curled up on a bundle of blankets for a few hours' sleep, until his dogs were fit to take the ninety-mile run north to Elkwan and the sick man who, officially, had died on the Ghost.

At noon he drove his refreshed team to the mission where Joan, standing beside her duffle bags, waited in the snow.

With the light load of two passengers, the big runner sled—its wooden shoes shod with ice, which slips over a hard surface with less friction than steel and can be renewed at will, would be sport for the five powerful dogs. Driving, as he would, to bring skill and medicine to the succor of the guest at Elkwan, Garth hoped to reach the post before dawn, but much depended on the light. A thick night would slow the dogs to a walk while crossing the mouths of the big rivers, where tide cracks opened and closed over night and the trail led through hummocks and ridges, bad going by day—at night, heart-breaking to driver and dogs.

"You're not sorry—haven't regretted promising to come?" he asked, as he wrapped her in robes and stowed her bags.

She shook her head. "Not in the least, Mr. Exile. I'm reconciled now to the loss of the last shred of my reputation. It was a wild scene—in the house. They even prayed for me when they realized threats were futile."

"Prayed for you—you, bound on an errand of mercy? In the name of all the saints, they'd let an innocent man die for want of proper care, because of my reputation? I must be a monster to them."

She laughed. "Yes, I can truthfully say that after what my brother told them, they think you are a terrible person."

"Do you?" he countered, leaning over the sled.

"Well—" her dark eles flashed up into his, "not exactly terrible, rather—what shall I say?—stubborn."

"Marche, Castor!"

And the huskies, with Shot ahead, galloped to the trade-house. There the Camerons were waiting for the girl who had, also, burned her bridges. Shortly, down the cliff trail and over the river-ice raced the team, carrying hope for Craig Galbraith, deep in delirium at Elkwan, ninety white miles away.

As they left the river and turned up the coast, Guthrie's anxious eyes circled the gray horizon for indications of what would follow the haze-smothered sunset over the Keewatin muskeg. For days, now, the weather had softened to above zero temperature, a characteristic of James bay winters, which are milder than those of the forest country to the south, and he prayed for a bright night, as his thoughts were busy with the tragedy of Craig Galbraith and his own part in the climax of the pitiful history.

The decision he had made beside the bunk in the Ghost, once he had struck on a feasible plan of procedure, was inevitable to the man who owed his life to the heroism of the stricken Galbraith. But the situation which Guthrie faced as he watched the high barrens of Akimiski catch and hold the veiled light of the dying sun, might easily result not only in dismissal from the company but in arrest by the authorities. His clear duty to his employers had demanded that he report to Cameron the presence of Laughing McDonald at Elkwan. The information that a Hudson's bay factor had concealed from the government a man suspected of murder would raise a hornets' nest in Ottawa. All this Garth Guthrie had seen with clear vision the night before, when he shared his plan with Etienne, but as his eyes rested for an instant on the tragic face of the friend who, that day in front of Amiens, had not counted the cost, there was in his face the look of a man who would repay to the last farthing. Ottawa, the company he had served so well, were nothing. There lay Craig Galbraith, sick, hunted by the law he had defied, deserted—Laughing McDonald, whom he had fought for the trade—his friend, and he would see it through. Craig should have his chance, slight as it looked. With the woman of the great heart and the skilled hands, he was hurrying over the sea-ice as fast as five Ungavas could travel. Hold on, Galbraith, V. C.! as you held at many a disputed parapet and shell-hole!

They had talked little through the first miles, the thoughts of the man centered on his problem. With the skill of long training, she had gone into the details of Etienne's wound, and Garth had had no heart so early in their journey for a confession of his duplicity. But when, off the mouth of the Big Willow, he announced that it was time to rest the dogs and eat the supper prepared by Mrs. Cameron, he felt that, over the hot tea, Joan Quarrier should be told the facts.

With the aid of cedar kindlings carried on the sled, he soon had a fire under the teakettle.

"Do you realize how you have ignored your passenger, Mr. Exile? This is my first ride behind the dogs and I wanted to talk about them."

The huskies, except Shot, who was inspecting the willow thicket, were sprawling in their harness, sniffing hungrily at the odor of bacon. Now that he was alone with Joan, was to be alone with her through the long miles to Elkwan, Guthrie felt strangely diffident. Until he had laid the truth before her, told of the love he bore this broken thing, once feared as Laughing McDonald, waiting in such sore need of her ministrations, and received her absolution for his deception, he would feel ill at ease with the woman who faced the world with the stark truth in her eyes.

"Let me see," she went on, "I know Castor and Pollux, but that cream-colored one?"

"Oh, that's Dido," he laughed, "and the white-gray one is Aeneas."

"Aeneas? And does he run away from her like his namesake?"

"Run away? Hardly. She's the fastest dog in the team. What's more, he doesn't try. He's more constant than Virgil's hero."

"What's the name of that surly one, who growls so much?"

"Oh, that's Achilles, of course, the sulker. But he's not so much of a hero. He's deathly afraid of Castor, and Shot fought him to a standstill, once."

Pouring her a cupful of the steaming tea and making a sandwich with the bacon, he passed Joan her supper.

Watched the Murk Slowly Blot Out the Stars.

"My, I'm hungry! How good the tea tastes! But aren't the dogs to have some fish after their work?"

"No, they were fed this morning. If I feed them now, it would make them lazy; we wouldn't reach Elkwan before noon, and I'm worried—I'm afraid we're going to be too late as it is."

She looked up, puzzled at his tone. "Why, you said he wasn't bleeding badly—no artery involved. It's only a matter of keeping the wound clean."

The moment had come.

"I have a confession to make to you, Joan Quarrier," he began. "I have lied to you—brought you from a warm shelter up this coast tonight on false pretenses."

"False pretenses! What do you mean?" She was curious but not disturbed.

"I have been the cause of your breaking with the Swans—given the missionary people the chance to raise their saintly eyebrows in horror—for what?"

"Why, my dear man!" she protested, "I understand all that. Their prattle can't hurt me, can it? I don't understand. Where is the lie?"

He sucked in a deep breath and leaned toward her, as he said: "Etienne was not shot. You're on your way to help me save a friend—a friend who crawled with me on his back through gas and shell fire. They broke his arm and got him in the chest, but he came through. Can you guess who it is?"

Her dark brows contracted as she met the pleading look of the man standing by the fire. Slowly she shook her head. "You said Etienne was hurt. Now you say it was some one else—I don't see—"

"Laughing McDonald."

"Laughing McDonald?" she cried. "You said you found him dead on the schooner?"

"He was alive, but very sick—'flu,' pneumonia, I'm not sure— Etienne and an Indian took him to Elkwan while I came to ask you to go—to help—"

"He was this friend who saved your life—in France?" she asked, wide-eyed with surprise.

"Yes, Capt. Craig Galbraith. He took the name of McDonald—"

"When he disappeared after the murder?" she broke in.

"That is unworthy of Joan Quarrier," he demanded gently.

"But his description tallies with that of the man wanted in Halifax. You forget that I've seen him"

Guthrie warmed to the defense of his friend. "Suppose he is the man? Is it strange that a man branded for life with that grimace," he pleaded, "a man, proud, sensitive, coming home with the Victoria Cross—twice won—should go mad when the wife he cherished, as I know he did, turns, in horror of his scars, to a lover? Tell me, is it strange?"

"It was murder," she objected, half-heartedly.

"No, not if the man was struck in the heat of passion—as Galbraith could strike. It was retribution."

"After all, he was a gallant soldier," she mused aloud, "and he saved your life."

Ignoring the inference, Garth pressed his point, for he saw to his joy that his story had touched her. "Think what his bitterness—his agony—must have been, doomed forever to wear that mask, when the woman who should have been proud to bear his name failed him. Imagine his loneliness—his despair, when, in his need, she turned to another."

There was a mist in Joan Quarrier's eyes as she said: "You must have loved him greatly to defend him so well."

"He threw away his hope of reaching the lines, when he followed Shot to my shell-hole and started back with a gassed man; is it strange that I'm fighting for his life, oh, Healer of Wounds?"

For an instant, as he waited for her answer, she met the fierce pleading of his eyes, then looked into the thickening night as she said gently: "You have won. I'll give all I have to save him—for he was a gallant soldier—and has suffered."

Joan Quarrier did not see the pride, the gratitude, and the love that shone down on her from Guthrie's eyes.

* * * * * *

For an hour after the stop at the Big Willow for the hot tea the weather had been gradually thickening. As the dogs followed the coast, Guthrie's restless eyes watched the murk slowly blot out the stars. It meant feeling their way past the river mouths; and, across the delta of the Attawapiskat, a sharp watch on the compass to avoid entering the river itself. Clearly caution dictated turning into the Kapiskau and spending the night at the post. But the chance of the man at Elkwan might hang on the hours saved by pushing on through the sable blanket which shrouded the coast. He turned to the girl muffled in robes on the sled behind him.

"It's not going to be cold, but a cold night with the stars would be better than this."

"How can you tell where we're going? I can't see a thing."

"I'm letting Castor pick the trail—just checking him with the compass. It has a luminous dial."

"But he can't see any more than we can."

All Sorts of Things Occupy Engaged Man

Sunday: Engagement announced in the society column.

Monday: Received calls from eighteen insurance agents, who kept him on the defensive trying to explain why he didn't recognize his added responsibilities.

Tuesday: Was interviewed by seven furniture dealers, three motor car salesmen and thirteen real estate specialists.

Wednesday: Found approximately thirty-eight pounds of mail on his desk, chiefly from florists and gift shops, with a good representation from tailors, interior decorators, greeting card handlers and seed houses.

Thursday: Held open house for seventeen miscellaneous callers who were completing follow-up campaigns.

Friday: Spent an instructive two hours perusing circulars from travel agencies. Learned that every state and thirteen foreign countries offered honeymoon possibilities. Received professional cards from three plumbers.

Saturday: Decided to close the office early, but not before the postman left a letter from a lawyer who conveyed the information in thinly disguised fashion that he specialized in all sorts of domestic misunderstandings.—Kansas City Star.

Wrong Number

Feminine logic was demonstrated in a phone call received by a startled gentleman who picked up the instrument the other evening to hear a frenzied female voice demanding: "Is this you, Jim."

"No," he returned politely. "You have the wrong number."

"Well, you big sap," came the voice at the other end, in snappy accents, "why the dickens don't you hang up so I can get my party? Of all the nitwits I ever saw—why, you poor prune—" and so on, while the amused young man listened patiently to her colorful tirade.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Orchids of Africa

There are gorgeous orchids, often two to three feet in height, and many "bulbous" plants in Africa, says Nature Magazine. The glorious Kaffirboom has the bluest of skies as a background for its crown of red blossoms. The Cape chestnut is clad in a mantle of pale mauve pink.

Italian dictionaries contain about 140,000 words. English dictionaries contain about 400,000.

Business men do good preaching by fighting their competitors. One of their favorite ways of fighting a competitor is to behave better than he does. Many an art gallery, orchestra, school, had been founded as a meanness: to get ahead of a competitor. An opposition editor in my town years ago was so good a man that he became governor of his state. He was so well behaved and capable that I was compelled to behave and work hard to prevent his ruining me, as he sincerely wished to do. Although he hated me be was one of the strongest influences in my life for good. He wished to butcher me, but really saved me.

Cora Harris is an old-fashioned sort of woman I have always liked. Lately she said, "the women are acquiring a great fund of wisdom, but it is of the wrong kind." That's one trouble with all of us: we are becoming smart alecks, rather than smart. . . . Wisdom is a convenient and useful thing like a sharp knife, or a good hoe when you have a potato patch to rid of weeds. Why should not people acquire wisdom as they acquire any other valuable thing and not boast of it in foolish clubs? Why should not the people behave well as a matter of intelligent self-interest and not claim to be saving the world?

There are dozens of different notions as to the greatest thing in the world, and most people make a wrong guess about it. It is actually a very simple thing: taking care of yourself. I do not mean by this, narrow selfishness, but the selfishness which appreciates that a sick man is a burden to some one. A strong man physically is most apt to do good things. Half the desperate acts are committed as a result of auto-intoxication, probably. Most suicides begin thinking gloomy thoughts because of unnecessary bad health or conduct.

Red Cedars and Apples Don't Mix

Relationship Similar to That Between Barberry Bush and Wheat.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Choose between red cedars and apples. In the eastern United States, and in some other parts of the country, a neighborhood may have either but not both of these trees without danger of trouble for both. The cedar and the apple have been found to have a relationship—or antagonism—similar to that existing between the barberry bush and wheat, in which each is affected by one of those strange fungous growths in which one generation of the fungus develops on one plant and cannot reproduce on that plant, but only on the other of the pair of plants so strangely coupled.

Spores Cause Damage.

For years apple tree rust was familiar to scientists, as was also the Virginia red cedar rust, which produced galls. The two were supposed to be distinct, but after the wheat and barberry coupling was established further studies revealed that a similar relationship existed between apple trees and red cedars. Spores from the cedar gall are blown to apple leaves and fruit, where they reproduce and cause damage within a few weeks, after which the spores of this second generation return to the cedar for a lifetime of about 22 months.

Sprays Did Not Kill.

At first the apple rust affected only native crabapples, but from year to year it extended its damage to one supposedly resistant variety after another. Spraying, fatal to most other fungous growths, did not kill this rust, and Virginia apple growers found that the best method of preventing damage was to kill the cedar trees within a distance of a mile or two of apple orchards. When this was done damage from apple rust ceased. Or, conversely, in case the cedars are the more valuable, they should be protected from infectious apples.

The life history of this rust and the measures necessary for protection are outlined in a pamphlet, Separate No. 941-Y from the Yearbook of Agriculture, 1920, recently published by and obtainable from the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.

Native Vegetables Are Believed Most Valuable

In the American vegetable garden eight principal food products had their origin in the Indian crops existing here before the advent of the white man. These include beans, corn, peppers, pumpkins, squash, tomato, potato, and sweet potato. Vegetables of Old World origin are far more numerous. The United States Department of Agriculture lists 24 of importance: cucumbers, eggplant, muskmelon, watermelon, okra, asparagus, beets, brussels sprouts, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery, kale and collard, kohl-rabi, leek, lettuce, onion, parsley, parsnip, peas, radish, salsify, spinach, and turnip. But the value of the crop of the eight native vegetables is considerably greater than the 24 of foreign origin. Since the discovery of America the white man has not "tamed" any native plant which the Indians had not already brought from warmer parts of America, but notable improvements have been made in the quality and yields of most of these vegetables.

Good Barn Ventilation Helps Keep Down Frost

Good stable ventilation will help some in keeping down frost; but unless the wall is well insulated, there is bound to be considerable frost gather when the moist warm stable air strikes a wall which is 20 below zero on the outside. With a wooden wall it is not very difficult, since wood in itself is a fairly good insulator. Two thicknesses of lumber and heavy building paper outside, and a layer of insulation and matched lumber inside the studding will make a warm wall. Sometimes the space between the studding is filled with sawdust or similar material. This is warm but has a tendency to draw dampness.

Texas Bandit Queen Unhandicapped by Sex

Fully twenty years before American women besieged the White House, the capitals and the villages until they got the vote, one American woman considered it proper for a woman to "fill a man's shoes." If she could do it. She was Belle Starr, the Calamity Jane of Texas, styled by some newspapers of the time the "Queen of the Bandits."

Belle was once asked why she, a woman, undertook to play the part of a man in the Starr coterie. She took her pistol, pointed out a leaf on a nearby tree and shot two holes in it before it fell.

"Did you ever see my husband do that well?" she asked.

"No."

"Then why shouldn't I take his place? Because I'm a woman? That's no argument. If you get a thing done, does it matter whether you're a man or a woman? I've no patience with these silly women who depend on men for their opinions."—Kansas City Star.

Huge London Waste

The amount of waste in a large city was shown in a recent survey made in London, where 1,500,000 tons of refuse are gathered and dumped each year at a cost of $3,500,000.

Engineers told the councilmen there that if the waste were treated scientifically about one-half the cost would be avoided, important by-products would be supplied, and, if the dry refuse were burned, at least 332,000,000 units of electrical power could be produced.

OBBERS ENTERED THREE PLACES HERE

OUT $400 DOLLARS WORTH OF GOODS STOLEN

ellemeyer Store Suffered Loss Of About $300 Dollars

Merchandise valued at over $300 d about 150 gallons of gasoline, d a small amount of change were ken by robbers who broke into ree Klemme business places early nday morning or late Sunday rht. The places entered and robb- were the Wellemeyer Company, W Kluckhohn & Sons general re and the Standard Oil Co. Fill- Station.

It is the general opinion that the bberies were committed around :30 or 3 00 o'clock Monday morn- g, for about that time residents in e west part of town heard a truck sely followed by a car, drive in m the west and down around the ck yards toward the depot.

Wellemeyer Has Heavy Loss

The thieves made their biggest ul at the Wellemeyer Store where ey attempted to jimmy open doors d being unsuccesful in this enter- by way of a cellar window on the st side of the building where they ted up a side-walk grating and oke out a window pane and unlat- ed a basement window through ich they entered, later making eir exit from the boiler room and t a cellar stairway on the north de of the building.

They rifled the safe and cash awers of the store and obtained 19.97 in small change Merchan- ise valued close to $300 was taken m the raid. Of this amount the obbers took ladies' silk hose valu- d at $126, mens' silk hose $25.00 rool hose $4.50, mens' sweaters at $18 00, mens' gloves $8.00, silk mufflers $36.00, slip on sweaters at $22 50, Prince Albert tobacco $10 cigars $6 00, thermos bottle kits $8.00 and other miscellaneous arti- cles.

The robbery was discovered when Mr Wellemeyer and Mr Rouge op- ened the store Monday morning.

Kluckhohn's Store Entered

It is thought that the robbers next entered Kluckhohn's store where en- trance was gained by pushing open a transome windiow at the rear of the store which is located about 9 feet up from the floor and which gives outside light for a small wash room at the rear of the store Boxes were piled up outside on which the robber was able to reach the win- dow and enter the store. Here like- wise the robbers had attempted to gain entrance by jimmying doors, both front and rear, but in this they were not successful, as the doors are heavy and well-barred. After looting the store the burglars made their getaway through a rear door which they unbolted.

The Kluckhohn brohers were un- able to furnish us with a close check up but their loss included about $15 in change taken from the cash regis- ter, and three or four pairs of ladies oxfords were taken, a single barrel 16-gauge shotgun, two pairs of hair clippers, a flashlight and perhaps other and more valuable merchan- dise.

At this point it is thought the robbers were frightened away, as "Slim" Brinkman came up to the Etchen garage, across the alley from the store, shortly after three o'clock to get Gus Baack's car, as Gus and his wife and Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Wenig were here from Sheboygan, Wisconsin, and wanted to get an ear- ly start for home. Brinkman turn- ed on all the lights and was rather noisy in slamimng doors and no doubt this was about the time the robbers were at work and they may have been frightened away and thus overlooked a lot of valuable merchan dise at Kluckhohn's store.

Filling Station Robbed

Sometime during the night tho gang of robbers entered Wm. Kirk- wood's Standard Oil Filling Station, jimmying a window on the west side of the building to gain entrance The cash drawer was rifled but no cash had been left there by the proprietor However, keys to the pumps were in the drawer and with this aid the thieves unlocked the Ethyl gas pump and helped themselves to approximately 150 gallons or more of gas, acording to Mr. Kirkwood's check-up Evidently the robbers were provided with a large tank on a truck, or had several empty bar- rels with them to cart away that amount of gasoline. The robbers again overlooked more valuable ar- ticles at the filling station as there were a number of automobile tires on a shelf, and some barrels of oil and other articles about.

Crow-bar marks were found on the window sills at the Northern Lumber Co. office, but the building was not entered. For some reason or other the robbers gave up their job easily at that place and did not seem to use much force in trying to break in.

About three years ago a similar robbery took place in Klemme and the same places were entered and articles stolen from the stores.

Sheriff E. P. Hanson and Deputy M N. Zeiger, of Garner, were on the scene of robbery Monday morning to find what clews they could and to get a check-up on the goods stol- en

ROBBERS ENTERED CREAMERY AT BRITT

Butter And Cheese Carted Away Last Friday Night

Butter and cheese, valued at bout $400, were stolen from the creamery at Britt last Friday ight The robbers gained entrance to the building through the boiler room.

The haul consisted of 700 pounds of butter and about 145 pounds of Wisconsin cheese. The thieves left one tub of butter near the door that was either overlooked or they had a full load.

Lumber Office Also Entered

Robbers working Thanksgiving night forced their way into the lum- ber office at Britt and attempted to open the safe. However, they did not succeed and nothing was taken.

KLEMME PEOPLE IN ACCIDENT LAST WEDNESDAY NIGHT

Heavy Snow Fall Made Driving Al- most Impossible

Wm. Anderson, a young man from west of town acompanied by Miss Ilo Klotchzbach and her mother Mrs. Levi Klotchbach were driving to Garner early last Wednesday even- ing in Mr. Anderson's Ford roadster during the heaviest part of the snow storm. At a point north of the Grei- man brick home on No. 15 the driv- er of the car opened the door in or- der to ascertain just where the edge of the grade might be located as the thick falling snow made it impossi- ble to see through the windshield Just as he opened the door the car slid off the grade, falling on the op- en door and then roling over onto the top.

Outside of a few small scratches and minor bruies, the occupants of the car were not injured.

Mr Levi Klotzbach drove to Gar- ner later in the evening and brought the party to Klemme.

Francis Lawhorn Severely Injured

A short time after the above ac- cident Francis Lawhorn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lawhorn of Gar- ner met with an auto acident which nearly cost him his life.

Lawhorn was driving south on No 15 and had reached a point abou a mile south of Garner when his sport model Star touring car was struck broadside by a Marmon car driven by a Forest City man.

Lawhorn was injured when flying glass cut his throat, barely missing the juglar vein and cutting him se- verely elsewhere about his neck He was rushed to a Garner doctor for first aid and later taken to a Mason City hospital for further at- tention At last reports he is gett- ing along well

Lawhorn's car received a broken right fender, broken windshield and other damage. The Marmon car re- ceived a broken headlamp, damaged bumpers and frame.

FIND DAIRY FEED PRICES VARY OVER THE STATE

Much Higher In Some Sections Of State Than In Others

Dairymen in Clayton County must figure corn at 85 cents a bushel and oats at 53 cents, while those iu Clay or Cerro Gordo counties may figure corn at 65 cents and oats at 45.

These were the wide ranges in prices found by extension dairymen of Iowa State College who have been holding meetings for cow testers the last few weeks in widely scattered regions of Iowa Rations were fig- ured out at the various meetings and local prices were used to deter- mine the costs of various rations.

The prices of mill feeds such as linseed oilmeal and cottonseed meal did not vary as much as did grain prices. The prices reported at the various meetings were as follows:

Waterloo: Corn 70, oats 45, soy beans $1 50 a bushel, barley 74, bran $31 a ton, oilmeal $50 and cotton- seed meal $45.

Des Moines: Corn 70, oats 45, barley 70, soybeans $1 50, cotton- seed meal $45, bran $30 and oilmeal $50.

Mason City: Corn 65, barley 65, oats 40, soybeans $1 30, cottonseed meal $45, bran $30 and oilmeal at $50.

Spencer: Corn 65, oats 40, bran $33, oilmeal $50, cottonseed meal $45.

Elkader: Corn 85, oats 53, bar- ley 80, oilmeal $50, bran $31, and cottonseed meal $44.

HOME MADE CHRISTMAS GIFTS ARE SUGGESTED

Home Economics At Ames List A Few Inexpensive Ones

A few prudential arrangements early in the season have saved many a housewife considerable worry over gifts during the Christmas rush. Numbers of useful gifts may be made easily before the holiday sea- son and thereby save strenuous com- petition with the Christmas shopp- ing crowds.

Inexpensive gifts suggested by members of the home economics fac- ulty at Iowa State College often are simply made and are valued highly by the recipients of the gifts. Aprons made of material which launders and irons well are always welcome gifts For the Sunday night apron a white organdie, Dutch style, with a band of white tucking at the top of the bib and at the top of he skirt portion and bound with light green binding, is suggested.

For the tiny baby a simple gr- trude slip of white fine cloth and trimmed in shell-scallop is a pleas- ing gift Rompers for the children who are slightly older or nifty little aprons for the small girls are val- ued highly.

Napkin Rings Easily Made

Perhaps a set of napkin rings made of curtain rings about one and one-half inches in diameter, wrapp- ed with baby ribbon, may be high- ly appreciated. Napkin rings also may be made by cutting strips of heavy linen about 8 inches long and 2 inches wide. One end is then tap- ered and the edges finished with blanket stitching or a narrow hem. A button hole is made in the taper- ed end and a button placed on the other Use of various colors in thread may aid in identifying the napkins while in use.

TWO NEW SNOW PLOWS BOUGHT BY HANCOCK COUNTY

Britt Man Will Have Charge Of Operation Of Plows

At the last meeting of the board of supervisors of Hancock County two snow plows of the push type were purchased from the LaPlant- Choate Manufacturing Company of Cedar Rapids, who submitted a bid of $2,841.

The plows will be used to keep Hancock County roads free of snow this winter. The machines are of the push-plow type and one will be attached to a big three ton truck and the other to a sixty horse power caerpillar ractor.

Silas Martin, of Britt, who is a road patrolman has been appointed to superintend the operation of the plows during the winter.

Court Had Short Vacation

Judge M. F. Edwards reconvened court again Monday after calling a short vacation over Thanksgiving

Petitions for the naturalization of a number of persons were heard on Tuesday: Olav Dossen Hagen, Kana- wha, a Norwegian; Bessie Bartik, a native of Czecho-Slovakia and a resi- dent of Britt; and Petro Dolce, of near Ventura.

The petit jury was called to as- semble again Tuesday.

The grand jury adjourned last Wednosday after returning one in- dictment, that against Martin Gray of Emmetsburg, on a charge of ill- egal transportation of intoxicating liquors Gray was arrested at Gar- ner a few weeks ago when he was caught with several gallons of li- quor in his automobile.

The case of the State of Iowa vs Herbert Dickhuis was disposed of Wednesday, Mr. Dickhuis being found innocent of the charges brot against him.

THE BUGGY RIDE

Only 8,000 buggies were made in this country last year. During the previous year more than 20,000 were created. Here is an industry, once of vast proportions, but now passing completely from the picture And speaking of pictures, that is where the buggies are found Many of them are used in movie stories. which deal with other days. There are now millions of girls who never had a buggy ride. They would give thanks for one, from sheer novelty. Yet there was a time when the Sun- day buggy ride sent a romantic thrill down the maidenly spine.

Chicago boasts a population of 3,719,910 which is certainly some- thing to shoot at.

Reports Cards To Be Out

Report cards for the second si weeks will go to parents last of this week. Both pride and chagrin will be observed on the faces of stu- dents We hope both will serve to ward greater effort these next six weeks which will mark the close of this semester and determine whe- her courses have been completed or must be repeated.

Some students are doing splendid work here, have good ability and ap- plication, and are paving the way each day for successful careers. A few, as in every school, are doing only enough to make their credits We have failures here as well as on our farms and in the professions and in the business world. They bring the same disappointment here as there. We try hand to avoid them but they result anyway. Our teach- ers are willing to do extra time he to help students who fall beh Some students are willing to re for the proffered help while other are not. Some parents insist on their children taking advantage of this extra service rendered their children. Others are apparently not interested. On the whole, however, parents want their children to make their credits and succeed in their school work, knowing full well that success here implies a greater pros- pect of success in life outside of school at a later date.

If any have failed to make their credits thus far, let's all pull to- gether and try to avoid semester failures.

Danger marks are D's and E's. C or F means the student has in reality failed. He may by greater ap- plication and effort and time spent on lesons be able yet to make good in this subject. None should ever give up. Giving up means certain failure We shall hope for few of these.

BEGIN YOUR XMAS SHOPPING NOW

Begin your Christmas shopping now. Have you realized how near the Christmastide has approached? It is "just around the corner," with all its immemorial sentiments and practical demands. It is unusual to urge early Christmas shopping for humantarian reasons, because of the overworked salespeople, mail carr- ers and others. But there are others. When one has time one must be able to make better selections of the things desired for the holiday celebration. No one can do this in the last minute rushes preceeding the day of days.

The Christmas spirit is in the air.

A Love Story

Col. E. H. R. Green, the capitalist, who is about to build a superb flying field at his South Dartmouth country place, said at a luncheon that he recently gave to a group of young flying officers:

"The airplane is swift, but modern love is swifter. Modern love, if we are to believe all we hear, is born swiftly, and it dies as swiftly as it is born.

"The whole story of modern love—if we believe all we hear—might be summarized in three sentences.

"'You ethereal beauty, I worship you.'

"'You beautiful woman, I love you.'

"'Holy mackinaw, go get your face lifted.'"

Imitation Is Flattery

Found Four-Yolk Egg

In candling eggs Bolivar Brothers, butter and egg men of Greater New York, came across one with four yolks. They have candled millions of eggs, but have never seen nor heard of another four-yolk egg. This one came from a chicken farm at Narrowsburg, N. Y. The brothers also have two eggs, each of which contains three yolks, a find which candlers discover about once every ten years. It appears that twins, triplets and quadruplets can happen in the poultry world, though they may not hatch.—Capper's Weekly.

Drugs Excite the Kidneys, Drink Water

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble because we often eat too much rich food. Our blood is filled with acids which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from overwork, become sluggish, the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache, or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or if you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, begin drinking lots of good soft water and get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralise the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

INJUN SUMMER

[Copyright 1912: By John T. McCutcheon.]

[This famous cartoon first appeared in The Tribune in the autumn of 1907. It is republished in response to many requests.]

Yep, sonny, this is sure enough Injun summer. Don't know what that is, I reckon, do you?

Well, that's when all the homesick Injuns come back to play. You know, a long time ago, long before yer granddaddy was born even, there used to be heaps of Injuns around here—thousands—millions, I reckon, far as that's concerned. Reg'lar aura 'nough Injuns—none o' yer cigar store Injuns, not much. They wuz all around here—right here where you're standin'. Don't be skeered—hain't none around here now, leastways, no live ones. They been gone this many a year. They all went away and died, so they ain't no more left.

But every year, 'long about now, they all come back, leastways, their sperrits do. They're here now. You can see 'em off across the fields. Look real hard. See that kind o' hazy, misty look out yonder? Well, them's Injuns—Injun sperrits marchin' along an' dancin' in the sunlight. That's what makes that kind o' haze that's everywhere—its jest the sperrits of the Injuns all come back. They're all around us now. See off yonder, see them tepees? They kind o' looks like corn shocks from here, but them's Injun tents, sure as you're a foot high. See 'em now? Sure, I knowed you could. Smell that smoky sort o' smell in the air? That's the campfires a-burnin' and their pipes a-goin' Lots o' people say it's just leaves burnin', but it ain't. Its the campfires, an' th' Injuns are hoppin' round 'em t' beat old Harry

You jest come out here tonight when the moon is hangin' over the hill off yonder an' the harvest fields is all swimmin' in th' moonlight, an' you can see the Injuns and the tepees jest as plain as kin be. You can, eh? I knowed you would after a little while.

Ever notice how the leaves turn red 'bout this time o' year? That's jest another sign of redskins. That's when an old Injun sperrit gits tired dancin' an' goes up an' squats on a leaf t' rest. Why, I kin hear 'em rustlin' and whisperin' an' creepin' round among the leaves all the time; an' ever' once in a while a leaf gits way under some fat old Injun ghost and comes floatin' down to the ground. See—here's one now. See how it is? That's the war paint rubbed off'n an Injun ghost, sure's you're born.

Purty soon all the Injuns'll go marchin' away agin, back to the happy huntin' ground, but next yr see 'em troopin' back—th' sky jest hazy with 'em and their campfires smelderin' away jest like they

INDIAN SUMMER has come and gone, but as usual it did not pass this year without the Chicago Tribune reprinting for the twentieth consecutive time, annually, John T. McCutcheon's famous cartoon, "Injun Summer." The Christmas season is almost here and soon the New York Sun will be reprinting for the thirtieth consecutive time, annually, the reply of one of its editorial writers to Virginia O'Hanlon, the little girl who wanted to know if there was a Santa Claus. And it won't be but a few weeks until the Kansas City Star receives a request from some reader which says, "Won't you please be sure to reprint H. T. Webster's cartoon, 'Hardin County 1809,' in your paper on Lincoln's birthday?" and when the Star does reprint it, it will be the tenth consecutive time, annually, that it has done so. Then a few weeks more and it will be nearly Memorial day. As that day approaches newspapers all over the state of Kansas (and no doubt in other states as well) will reprint Walt Mason's poem, "Little Green Tents."

For all of these—the cartoons, "Injun Summer" and "Hardin County, 1809," the bit of prose called "Is There a Santa Claus?" and the poem, "Little Green Tents"—are "Newspaper Classics," those inspired pictorial or written pieces which their creators, newspaper men all of them, once turned out, little dreaming that these creations of theirs would become famous. For them it was "all in the day's work." But, somehow, what they wrote or what they drew caught the public fancy, because of some great beauty, some great truth or some inherent human appeal in it, and the public carefully clipped it from the newspaper and laid it aside for future enjoyment. Or perhaps the public, as that anniversary came around again, remembered how they had enjoyed that picture or that bit of writing and immediately wrote to the editor of the paper in which they had seen it to ask, "Won't you please print it again?"

"Injun Summer" first appeared in the Chicago Tribune in the autumn of 1907 and almost immediately McCutcheon began to receive letters of appreciation. But it was not until the next year that the cartoon began its career as a "Newspaper Classic." When Indian summer came around that year, the Tribune began to receive letters from its readers, "Please reprint John McCutcheon's 'Injun Summer.'" It was the same the next year and the next and the next, until now the annual reprinting of the cartoon has become a tradition on the Tribune and an event to be looked forward to by the readers of that newspaper as the herald that Indian summer is again at hand.

Webster's "Hardin County, 1809," first appeared in 1918. One of the newspapers which was then receiving the syndicate service which included the work of this cartoonist, who is now on the staff of the New York World, was the Kansas City Star, and the next year, as Lincoln's birthday approached, the Star began to receive requests that the cartoon be reprinted. So "Hardin County, 1809," became a "Newspaper Classic" and February 12 of each year sees its reappearance.

The example of "Is There a Santa Claus?" as a "Newspaper Classic" is, if anything, more interesting than that of the cartoons. Not only has it been printed in the New York Sun every year for the last 30 years, but it has been reprinted repeatedly in thousands of other newspapers throughout the United States during that time. Curious to note, its first appearance was not during the holiday season. Evidently little Virginia O'Hanlon began to be concerned about Santa Claus long before Christmas that year, for it was on September 21, 1897, that the reply to her letter, written by Francis P. Church, an editorial writer, first appeared in the Sun. It is doubtful if there is any other single Christmas piece, with the possible exception of "The Night Before Christmas," which is so widely known.

Thanksgiving also has its "Newspaper Classic," even though it is not so well known as those connected with Christmas. Back in 1890 Irving Bacheller, the distinguished novelist, was the head of a newspaper syndicate in New York and one of his correspondents in the West was Will C. Ferril, now editor of the Rocky Mountain Herald in Denver. In that year Mr. Bacheller asked Mr. Ferril to write a western article for Thanksgiving and in compliance he wrote an article, based on conditions in the Far West at that time, which he called "No Grandmothers There." Under that title, or the title "A Land Without Grandmothers," as some of the newspapers using the article headed it, the sketch was printed in a large number of newspapers. Here is a part of the sketch:

Can you imagine, in these closing days of the year, with Thanksgiving close upon us, a whole land without grandmothers? That seems almost incredible in the long-settled communities of the East and South, where no family reunion is complete without at least one venerable figure so familiar and so dear to all in that household from the days of childhood's earliest recollection. Yet, between the Rocky mountains and the Pacific coast there are hundreds of thousands of homes where children are growing up without a glimpse of their own, or any other child's grandmother. They know nothing of the dear face, the soft gray hair, the quaint figure of that patient little woman who, day after day, sits in the quiet corner of the old home, knitting, knitting, and still knitting, while her thoughts are wandering far away into the long ago of her childhood. They know nothing of her gentle chidings, nor can they appreciate the quiet and kindly amusement in the household at grandmother's expense; when after searching the house for her "specs," she is reminded, in response to her anxious inquiry, that they are under the frills of her cap. Then there are quaint old songs of long ago, that even the fathers and mothers of the present day know not, which grandmother, with a quaver in her voice, will hum and sing when she thinks no one is near to hear. . . . Thousands of western boys and girls know nothing of this. A grandmother is to them almost as much of a myth as the heroine of a fairy story. . . . It is true there are some grandmothers in the Far West, but they are imported from the East and South. For most of them, the West is too far away. No doubt their hearts often reach out tenderly toward their grandchildren in and beyond the Rocky mountains. As to native-born grandmothers, they are very hard to find west of the Rocky mountains. With the exception of the early settlements in the Oregon country, the Mormons in Utah and the occasional home of the earlier trappers in the mountains, or ranches in California, the civilization is too young for native-born grandmothers. It was nearly forty years ago that the great rush was made to the gold fields of California, and not until ten years later did the tide of immigration start for Pike's peak. Possibly California may produce a few very youthful grandmothers, about, say, forty years of age, but you can scarcely find a native-born grandmother of even that early age in Colorado

Like the Christmas "Is There a Santa Claus?" the Thanksgiving "No Grandmothers There" struck a responsive chord in the hearts of its readers and at their request it has been reprinted by newspaper editors many, many times since it was written.

Out in Kansas, Memorial day would not be Memorial day if the local newspaper did not reprint a bit of verse once written by one of the favorite poets of the Sunflower state. Here is Walt Mason's poem which appears regularly in Kansas newspapers around May 30:

LITTLE GREEN TENTS

The little green tents where the soldiers sleep,
And the sunbeams play and the women weep
Are covered with flowers today.

And between the tents walk the weary few,
Who were young and stalwart in sixty-two,
When they went to the war away.

The little green tents are built of sod,
And they art not long and they are not broad,
But they have lots of room.

And the sod is part of the land they saved
When the flag of the enemy darkly waved,
The symbol of dole and gloom.

The little green tent is a thing divine;
The little green tent is a country's shrine,
Where the patriots kneel and pray.

And the brave men left, so old, so few,
Were young and stalwart in sixty-two,
When they went to the war away.

But it doesn't take an anniversary, such as Christmas, Thanksgiving or Memorial day, to produce a "Newspaper Classic." Sometimes it is a piece of oratory which, when printed in a newspaper, seems to have as much appeal as when it is spoken. Then come requests for a reprinting in the paper in which the speech was originally reported; other newspapers pick it up, and behold—another "Newspaper Classic"!

Once upon a time Senator George G. Vest of Missouri, while acting as an attorney in a law suit in which a Missouri "houn' dog" was involved, uttered a stirring tribute to "man's best friend." And Vest's "Dog Eulogy" has become a "Newspaper Classic" that has been reprinted thousands of times. The same is true of the "Blue Grass" masterpiece by Senator J. J. Ingalls of Kansas; of that tribute to "The corn, the corn, the royal corn," by Governor Oglesby of Illinois and of the eulogy on "Cotton" by John Trotwood Moore of Tennessee. Other states have from time to time produced "classics" of more than local fame, but few have become nationally known, as have those above mentioned.

Not all "Newspaper Classics," however, are such because of their appeal to the deeper emotions. Very often a bit of light verse, just a flippant jingle with an unforgettable lilt of rhythm or striking phrase will so catch the public fancy that long after its popularity has apparently died down newspapers will receive a request for its reprinting. How many times have George Thomas Lanigan's "Ahkoond of Swat" or the verses about "Punch, Conductor, Punch With Care," the joint composition of Isaac Bromley, Noah Brooks, W. H. Wyckoff and Moses P. Handy (they were not written by Mark Twain, as is often asserted, although he gave them wide circulation) been asked for and reprinted? Nobody knows! The times have been innumerable and they will be reprinted innumerable times, as will all "Newspaper Classics"

Is There a Santa Claus?

We take pleasure in answering at once and thus prominently the communication below, expressing at the same time our great gratification that its faithful author is numbered among the friends of the Sun:

"Dear Editor:

"I am eight years old. Some of my little friends say there is no Santa Claus. Papa says, 'If you see it in the Sun it's so.' Please tell me the truth, is there a Santa Claus?

"VIRGINIA O'HANLON.

"115 West Ninety-fifth street."

Virginia, your little friends are wrong. They have been affected by the skepticism of a skeptical age. They do not believe except they see. They think that nothing can be which is not comprehensible by their little minds. All minds, Virginia, whether they be men's or children's, are little. In this great universe of ours man is a mere insect, an ant, in his intellect, as compared with the boundless world about him, as measured by the intelligence capable of grasping the whole truth and knowledge.

Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. He exists as certainly as love and devotion exist, and you know that they abound and give to your life its highest beauty and joy. Alas, how dreary would be the world if there were no Santa Claus! It would be as dreary as if there were no Virginia. There would be no childlike faith then, no poetry, no romance, to make tolerable this existence. We should have no enjoyment except in sense and light. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world would be extinguished.

Not believe in Santa Claus! You might as well not believe in fairies! You might get your papa to hire men to watch in all the chimneys on Christmas eve to catch Santa Claus, but even if they did not see Santa Claus coming down, what would that prove? Nobody sees Santa Claus, but that is no sign that there is no Santa Claus. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see. Did you ever see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not, but that's no proof that they are not there. Nobody can conceive or imagine all the wonders there are unseen in the world.

You tear apart a baby's rattle and see what makes the noise inside, but there is a veil covering the unseen world which not the strongest man, nor even the united strength of all the strongest men that ever lived, could tear apart. Only faith, fancy, poetry, love and romance can push aside that curtain and view and picture the supernal beauty and glory beyond. Is it all real? Ah, Virginia, in all this world there is nothing else real and abiding.

No Santa Claus! Thank God he lives and he lives forever. A thousand years from now, Virginia, nay, ten times ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood.

Wild Ride on Deer

Friends vouch for the truth of the story told of Fred Rogers, a logger in the Marshfield (Ore.) district. He leaped on the back of a buck deer and rode it until it dropped exhausted. The deer was entering a river when Rogers mounted it, and it swam across with the double load. After a wild ride Rogers was able to get off and capture his prize.

Howe About—

By ED HOWE

©, Bell Syndicate. WNU Service.

John Quincy Adams said: "With most men reform is a trade—with some a swindling trade—with others an honest yet a lucrative trade. Reform for its own sake seldom thrives." A clever paragraph, yet it isn't true. Millions of men and women advocate reforms of various kinds consistently, intelligently, honestly, and without hope of reward, for the good of their children, their friends and neighbors. All reforms are forwarded and finally established by the efforts of the silent majority. The efforts of those who make reform a trade are not very effective; we are suspicious of the professional good man, but all respect and heed those among our neighbors who believe in a better world because of the knowledge, born of experience, that a better world will prove more profitable and comfortable for everybody.

It is generally said there was never before such shiftlessness as exists today. Millions of men are recklessly squandering money who will later need a few miserable pennies to provide necessities. Statistics proved, a quarter of a century ago, that 80 per cent of men are very poor after reaching sixty-five, and become charges on public charity or grumbling relatives. If the general shiftlessness is greater now than then, and increasing, will it be possible to provide a sufficient number of almshouses in the immediate future?

Men, women and children have had habits; all are familiar with the fact, from hearing it bawled by critics all their lives. Why are new books issued every day to tell us of our faults? Criticism does not cause us to give them up: indeed, it seems only to cause us to behave worse. Look how we behave about prohibition! Have we not been fully warned as to the devilishness of rum? Therefore why do not the critics engage in raising corn, and thus do good by reducing the price of food supplies? Why keep up their snarling, to the detriment of their lives and ours?

The great writing men seem to have a notion that they have a special mission to point out the shame of the world. We common people know it as well as the critics do, and are doing more to get rid of it.

A man's accomplishments must be genuine. Pay a man a tribute he does not deserve, and the other men will promptly rip it to pieces; but half the compliment for women are manufactured.

Some of his critics say Mussolini is a great scoundrel. I do not so estimate him. His only ambition is to bring peace and prosperity to his country. He is in revolt not against peace, but against tyranny. Is he not actually a great leader, compared with leaders like Napoleon, who lost a million of his followers in a single campaign? Good causes must have leaders as surely as bad causes. Mussolini certainly found his country going to pieces, and has now made it whole.

Philosophy is no more than an attempt of an individual to think and act as intelligently and honestly as his natural equipment will allow. William James said philosophy was an unusually thorough attempt to think clearly. I don't see why James should have used the term "unusually thorough." That means effort. No effort is required to think clearly, providing one is capable of it.

I rarely read that I do not encounter a reference to "the poor simpleton" who attempts "to make an honest living." No good workman, honest or intelligent man, ever wrote such a sentiment. It is one of the sentiments that belong in the realm of dishonesty or insanity.

* * *

When what is called a divine spark is struck and flashes out, it may be traced to some mean and candid man.

Millions of foolish people are not fools; there is not one in a thousand who does not "know enough."

A woman spends years in plotting to get a husband, and then isn't satisfied with him. This queenly person expects her man to act toward her with the gallantry displayed by those she rejected or couldn't get. I don't see why a woman should be so exacting with her man. She knew her mother was dissatisfied with her father; she never knew a wife who was satisfied. Why should she expect to be?

* * *

This is the great age of cranks. In the past, the cranks devoted their attention to spiritual things. Modern cranks expect more than is possible from practical things, precisely as the ancients expected too much of spiritual things. One is about as mischievous as the other.

* * *

People are as moral, as kind, as intelligent as they ever were: the trouble in 1927 is they are more shiftless, lazier, than they ever were before.

Traveler Sees Many Oddities in World

Standardization and deterritorialization go on the world over. Last summer in Avignon in the south of France under the shadow of the Palace of the Popes, in a restaurant that I had found admirable for 30 years—I had, indeed, years ago eaten there in the company of Frederic Mistral, the Provencal poet—there, in that sacred and august shadow I was offered Norwegian anchovies with the hors d'oeuvres and peche Melba made with California peaches out of a tin.

The Mediterranean that swarms with real anchovies was only 50 miles away, and Norway is 700 or so—and heaven alone knows how far it is from California to Avignon, whilst in the spring whole hillsides of Provence are nacreous pink with peach blossoms.

But the peaches go to London; and Norwegians and Californians go to Avignon to eat their home products, and I come to New York to eat Mediterranean anchovies. It is perhaps not a mad world, but it seems a pretty queer one sometimes.—Ford Madox Ford in Harper's Magazine.

The Soul's Decay

A dying body is a calamity, but shall we therefore look with calmness upon a dying soul? His soul is dead who is without self-respect. The man who yields to the brute force of the majority, to the vicious power of ridicule, to the subtle strength of inertia, and turns his back to the ancient traditions of his group, that man's self-respect is deserting him; his soul is dying.—Dr. Norman Salit.

Personality

No term is so carelessly used as personality. One is accustomed to speak of this man or woman possessing a pleasing personality or a disagreeable personality, as if no individual possessed more than one. Occasionally, it is true, unusual individuals are described as having dual personalities. What is unusual in such cases is not the number of the personalities, but the fact that they are so divergent, as in the case of Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.—Baltimore Sun.

Camel

The cigarette that knows how to "be itself"

There is no "pose" about Camel. It's just a good honest cigarette—the best ever—and it doesn't try to be anything else.

If all cigarettes were as good as Camel you wouldn't hear anything about special treatments to make cigarettes good for the throat. Nothing takes the place of choice tobaccos

War Nurse Mother of Forty-Four Children

The champion father and mother as far as number of children is concerned is a subject for never-ending dispute. Whenever the head of a large family steps forward to claim such a title there is certain to be produced records of still larger families. Recently a German named Scheinberg was nominated as the champion father. He was supposed to have had 87 children—four quadruplets, seven triplets and 16 sets of twins—by two wives. But investigation failed to locate this prolific father or his family.

Medical literature contains accounts of women having nearly 50 children, but such cases are not generally accepted as authentic. About the most notable authenticated case was that of Dr. Mary Austin, a Civil war nurse, who claimed 44 children—13 sets of twins and six triplets. Despite this large family she is supposed to have found time to study medicine and get a doctor's degree.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Splendid, But—

William Mitchell, former assistant chief of the air service, said on the Reliance:

"The government insists that there's nothing wrong with our governmental airplanes; it piles proof on proof; and then some accident gives the game away.

"It reminds me of a railroad restaurant. The eggs are dated there. Yes, the date of its laying is stamped on every egg. A splendid thing, but—

"A traveler went into this restaurant one night and asked for eggs. The waiter said:

"'I'm sorry, sir, but today's eggs are all gone. If you don't mind the date, though, I could give you a couple of tomorrow's.'"—Kansas City Times.

Measuring a Man's Blood

Recent tests have shown that when a man gives a quart of blood for a transfusion he parts with more than a fourth of his entire life stream. The average healthy man possesses an amount of blood that is 4.0 per cent, or about one-twentieth of his total weight; thus, if you weigh 160 pounds, you have about eight pounds of blood—a little less than four quarts. The quantity of blood was determined by injecting dye into each subject's circulation. Three minutes later samples of the blood were taken. The extent to which the dye had been diluted showed the amount of blood possessed.

Second-Hand Man

Elaine—I think your fiance is wonderful; I wouldn't mind marrying him myself.

Esther—All right, dearie; I'll let you know when I've finished with him.—Life.

Fine Raiment Barred

Notice posted in a Swiss hotel: "Strange gentlemen will to please not to dress for dinner, as this costume flutters the souls of the maid folk and no work is resulted. Humbly asked."

Rapid Seeding

Harold Saunders, a rancher and airplane owner in southern Oregon near Memford, recently planted ten acres of land to winter blue grass, using his airplane. The grass, peculiar to this country, grows from a bulb and it is tossed on the ground and left to mature in the winter and spring. The land was seeded in a few minutes.

The Utilitarian

Florist—How many roses do you want, miss?

Bride—Oh just about enough for two.—Life.

Has Many Colors

Some caterpillars are really handsome. The largest of our giant silkworms, the Cecropia caterpillar (Samia cecropia), is a beautiful creature, says Nature Magazine. It often measures four inches when full grown. Conspicuous fleshy protuberances or knobs that are illuminated with vivid colors, such as coral red, yellow and blue, adorn the body, itself a delicate bluish green.

Everybody recognizes common sense instantly; but that doesn't always make it popular.

Ancient Timepiece

Mrs. Dan McNeil of Carthage owns what she believes to be the oldest watch in the state of Arkansas. It was made 457 years ago, or in 1470. The timepiece was made in England, and has been in the McNeil family for many years.

Muscles of tough, live rubber lengthen its life

THE "muscles" of tough, live rubber give astonishing endurance and record-breaking long life—without adding weight—to Top Notch Buddy Boots. These ribs or muscles, strong as whalebone, add strength to the tops and prevent them from cracking. The tough gray soles stand up under the hardest going in muck and stumps, in ditches, slush or ice. The longest-wearing boot your money can buy. In short, hip and Storm King Lengths.

OUTLINES HIS WOES IN STYLE OF DAVID

English Clergyman Tells of Tribulations.

To write a modern parody of the Psalms of David has been often tried, but seldom with much success beyond achieving an occasional smart phrase without real application or point. Undeterred by the previous failures of others, however, a much perturbed London clergyman has sought this vehicle for the easing of the woes that beset his soul, and by the judicious use of solemn language diluted with a liberal allowance of up-to-the-minute slang, he has accomplished something that may, perhaps, be regarded as worth while. Thus, complaining of those who resent his air of solemnity, he writes as follows:

"Be he grave or serious in his demeanor: seeking to uphold the dignity of his cloth.

"He is said to be standoffish, 'pi,' and uppish: yea, the ungodly call him 'Holy Joe.'"

Similarly, he finds that, if he tries to be gay, greeting all and sundry with a merry jest, there are many whom he displeases, so that, in respect of his demeanor, he is very like the old man in the fable of "The Old Man and His Ass," who, trying to please everybody, ended up by pleasing nobody and lost his ass into the bargain This good clergyman has his problems also with young men and maidens, for if he holds aloof from them they mislike him much:

"So that when to him they should turn as to a friend in need, with them he cutteth no ice."

It is, however, when he seeks to interfere with the widespread habit of tippling that he gets into really hot water

"Again, if beholding overmuch intemperance in his flock: he exhorteth all men to abstain from strong drink.

"He is said to be a killjoy and inhuman: a very Stiggins whose mind is straightened.

"But if he entereth a tavern and putteth his foot upon the rail of brass: there be those who say, 'Behold a wine-bibber.'

"So when he bloweth froth, he committeth iniquity: and when he bloweth it not, he is like a sinner."

The conclusion to which the parson comes, surrounded by perplexities so dire, is doubtless the best thing in his Twentieth-century psalm:

'Let the servant therefore walk in the steps of his Master: and care nought for the opinion of men."

It is an undoubtedly wise decision and has the added merit of possessing a far-reaching application.

"Hand Shague" Common

"Hand shague," which caused President Coolidge to carry his hand in a bandage as a result of too much handshaking, is a very troublesome complaint, according to medical men It belongs to the family of writers' cramp and tennis knee and other complaints that can be traced to a definite pursuit. Many persons in public life have suffered from it. Only the other day Mrs. Stanley Baldwin, wife of the British premier, suffered an attack of it after shaking hands with 600 women at a political meeting The prince of Wales suffered from it badly on each of his tours to distant parts of the empire. Lloyd George and the earl of Oxford and Asquith have both been laid up with it. And Bernard Shaw has been heard to declare that he will never risk it again

The Unkindest Cut

After months of careful nurturing the fledgling mustache was just beginning to be noticeable on the lip of its proud young possessor, who walked manfully into the barber shop and demanded a shave. The hot towels were soothing and he half napped as the conscientious barber scraped off fuzz and lather with practiced strokes. The process completed, the youth roused himself and glanced into the mirror at his clean-shaven lip. Consternation flushed beneath the epidermis.

"Where is my mustache?" he exclaimed.

"I haven't seen it," replied the puzzled barber.

Odd Power of Light Rays

By the use of cleverly controlled rays of colored lights and a refraction screen, a Washington artist is able to make things invisible, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. At a demonstration a person sitting in a chair was suddenly "dissolved from sight" while the chair remained. According to reports, the late Houdini was to have employed this system in causing an entire audience to disappear The "magic" of the stunt is based on certain laws of light and vision and emphasized the fact that our eyes are dependent upon light rays for what they see.

Their Occupation

"What is going on here?" asked a visitor in Petunia. "I have noticed quite a number of young men sneaking around corners, peering into windows, hiding behind ash barrels, measuring places on the ground, remarking 'Hist!' and the like."

"Them's graduates of a College of Detection, up to Kay See, and they are trying to detect crime," replied Constable Slackputter, the well-known sleuth. "But as long as they don't do anything but try to detect, I can't very well arrest 'em."—Kansas City Star.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

New Englanders and Wall Street Eager to "Draft" President Coolidge.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

EASTERN Republicans, political and business leaders, cannot reconcile themselves to seeing President Coolidge eliminated from the contest for the nomination next year. They never have given up the idea that he could be "drafted" by the convention, and should be, despite his expressed reluctance to run again. Last week they got very busy, especially in Wall street and in New England, with plans to push the Coolidge boom. In Boston a chain letter petition was started by some of those who believe Mr. Coolidge should be virtually compelled to accept a re-nomination. The White House correspondents questioned the President on this matter and he told them he could not see that the circulation of the petition would serve any good purpose and he hoped it would be discontinued. This being telegraphed over the country, the proponents of the chain letter issued a statement asking that all work on the plan cease immediately.

However, the correspondents left the White House somewhat mystified and as uncertain as ever in their interpretation of the President's attitude toward the general proposition of conscripting him for another term. Many Republican senators and representatives thought nothing had been added to the Coolidge statement of August 2 and that, while the President does not want another term and does not want to be drafted, he nevertheless would not refuse to respond to the call if the party should ask him to sacrifice his personal inclinations. Others influential in the party believe he will not be a candidate under any circumstances.

The theory accounting for the sudden interest manifested by New York Republican leaders in the renomination of the President is that they are becoming panic stricken over the danger of losing that state in the Presidential election. That Al Smith will be the Democratic nominee is now generally taken for granted, particularly since dry Democrats have been seen throwing up the sponge in various parts of the country, and Smith has repeatedly shown his ability to carry New York state against great odds.

Unless Mr. Coolidge absolutely rejects a re-nomination before congress meets on December 5 the anti-third term agitation will be renewed, and Senator La Follette will reintroduce his resolution declaring a President should not serve more than eight years.

Frank O. Lowden's boom grew somewhat with the authorized announcement that his name would be entered in the Indiana preferential primary. Dawes, it was understood, would not contest the delegation with the former governor of Illinois, and Senator Watson, who has been credited with Presidential ambitions, was advised emphatically by his friends to stay out of the race. The Lowden boomers declare their man will enter the convention with more assured votes than he had in 1920.

SECRETARY MELLON'S program of tax reduction was ripped all up the back by the house ways and means committee, which practically completed the new revenue bill. First the committee agreed upon a reduction of taxes not to exceed $250,000,000, and then it slashed the miscellaneous taxes that Mr. Mullen wanted unchanged. The taxes on automobiles and capital stock transfers were cut in half. The exemption on admissions was raised from 75 cents to $1, the rate on boxing matches being increased from 10 to 25 per cent on admissions of $5 and more. The stamp tax on dealings in futures on grain and produce exchanges was repealed. The taxes on grape wines were reduced to the pre-war level. The tax on corporation earnings was cut from 13½ to 11½ per cent, one-half per cent more than recommended by Secretary Mellon. The Mellon proposal under which corporations with net earnings of $25,000 or less and with no more than ten stockholders would have the option of paying taxes as partnerships was rejected. In place of it the committee increased the exemption on corporations with earnings of less than $25,000 from $2,000 to $3,000.

CHICAGO won a big victory in the battle over diversion of water from Lake Michigan through the Chicago sanitary canal. Charles Evans Hughes, special master for the United States Supreme court, recommended to that tribunal that the case brought by Wisconsin and other states bordering on the Great Lakes be dismissed. After holding that the complainants had presented a justifiable controversy and that the sanitary district has no authority to divert the water without the consent of the United States, Judge Hughes declared that congress has conferred authority upon the secretary of war to regulate the diversion, and that the permit of March 3, 1925, is valid and effective according to its terms, the entire control of the diversion remaining with congress. Therefore he recommended that the bill be dismissed.

TAX laws were materially clarified by the Supreme court in its interpretation of numerous questions which had worried both taxpayer and tax collector. In one case involving taxes on incomes derived by lessees of Indian tribal oil lands, the government established its right to retain approximately $150,000,000 in revenue. In another proceeding the government lost in its contention that under the revenue act of 1924 it could tax gifts made prior to enactment of the law.

IN A case brought down from Alaska the Supreme court held invalid the drastic provisions of the dry law of the territory prohibiting the possession of liquor in a private home even for the personal use of the owner, and declared residents of Alaska are entitled to the same protection against unreasonable searches as are given residents of other parts of the United States.

Federal Judge Killits in Toledo, Ohio, in dismissing a case against a farmer charged with operating a still, declared the law of the sanctity of the home was a higher and more sacred law than the Volstead act or any prohibition law.

HARRY SINCLAIR, William J. Burns, W. Sherman Burns, Sheldon Clark, H. Mason Day and C. L. Veltsch, manager of the Burns agency in Baltimore, were cited by Justice Siddons of the District of Columbia Supreme court for criminal contempt in connection with the mistrial of the Teapot Dome oil case. They are ordered to appear before the court on December 5 to show cause why they should not be sentenced under the statutes.

REAR ADMIRAL WILLIAM H. BULLARD, chairman of the federal radio commission, died suddenly of heart disease at the naval hospital in Washington, where he had gone to rest for a slight operation. His death came at the end of a famous career, 36 years which was spent in the United States navy.

ABOUT fifteen hundred convicts in the California state prison at Folsom staged a desperate revolt on Thanksgiving day and fought the guards, militiamen and other officers with guns, knives and other weapons in their effort to escape to the hills. In the first encounters two guards and six convicts were killed and a number wounded. Two United States army tanks were sent from Salinas to help the state troops, and at this writing the convicts are under siege in the prison.

COL. NOBLE BRANDON JUDAH, well known Chicago banker and lawyer and a distinguished war veteran, was appointed ambassador to Cuba by President Coolidge. This is his first diplomatic post, and it is considered an important one, especially because the Pan-American congress is to meet in Havana in January. Colonel Judah was born in Chicago in 1884 and went to France with the Three Hundred and Thirty-second field artillery, later becoming assistant chief of staff of the First army corps. He participated in five major campaigns and was decorated for bravery by America and France.

COL. CHARLES R. FORBES, former director of the federal veterans' bureau, who was sent to Leavenworth for two years for defrauding the government, left the penitentiary last week. He had completed his sentence and, having signed a pauper's affidavit, served thirty additional days in lieu of paying a $10,000 fine.

WARFARE in the Colorado coal strike region broke out, as predicted, when state police and mine guards at the Columbine mine, thirty miles from Denver, opened fire on a big and threatening mob of strikers that invaded the mine property. Five of the mob were killed and more than a score were wounded. Governor Adams called out the National Guard and tank, airplane, infantry and cavalry units were sent to the trouble zone. A proclamation declaring martial law was given to Adjutant General Newlon to post if he deemed it necessary. The I. W. W. leaders of the strike rather unexpectedly did not meet the situation with arms, but instead called on all the strikers to refrain from violence. They swore out warrants for the arrest of the mine superintendent and an under sheriff on charges of murder.

RUMANIA was thrown into mourning by the sudden death of its premier and virtual dictator, Ionel Bratiano. This brought to the fore again the possible return of former Crown Prince Carol, but the Rumanian minister to Paris was instructed to warn Carol not to attempt to enter the country.

ITALY'S reply to the Franco-Yugo-Slavian treaty was the publication of a treaty of military alliance between Italy and Albania which was signed Tuesday. The danger of hostilities was so serious that, on orders from Foreign Secretary Chamberlain of Great Britain, the British ambassador to Rome urged Mussolini not to be rough with Yugo-Slavia, because it is a young state and unversed in the niceties of diplomacy.

SOVIET Russia has agreed to take part in the coming disarmament conference at Geneva, and its full intentions there are a matter of much concern to the other nations. Premier Rykov said last week: "The Soviet union is ready to propose, support and carry out the most radical program of disarmament for the whole globe, and simultaneously conduct a campaign against proposals only destined to mislead and disguise preparation for a new war under a mask of pacificism."

Vice Foreign Minister Litvinoff declared the Soviet delegation was going to Geneva to propose a complete and general disarmament, and he added that Moscow has no faith in the good will of "capitalist nations" or in their ability to disarm.

Leon Trotzky and his associates in the opposition party in Russia, having been ousted from the Communist party, have been put on probation for six months with plain warning that unless they cease their machinations they will be banished to Siberia or executed. Reports from south Russia said Trotzky supporters had fought the government police in Odessa, Kharkov and other Ukrainian cities and that 18 persons were killed and 30 injured. The Ukrainians want a separate republic.

GERMANY and Poland have ended their long customs war by the signing of a protocol which declares an armistice in the economic battle over coal and manufactured products on the principle that the Poles will have the right to send coal, farm products and manufactured articles into Germany while the Germans will have the right to open banks and places of business and sell manufactured articles in Poland.

SOCIALIST members of the Belgian cabinet insisted on a reduction of the term of military service and brought about the resignation of the ministry. Premier Jaspar promptly formed a new ministry which contains no Socialists.

WHERE CHRISTMAS SEAL MONEY GOES

Using Christmas Seals Save Human Lives.

The annual sale of Christmas seals which extends from Thanksgiving to Christmas is enlisting the active efforts of hundreds of workers and interest of thousands of citizens all over the state.

The seals are sold in every county by local public health associations or other organizations affiliated with the Iowa Tuberculosis Association.

The design of this year's seal is shown in the accompanying cut. The color scheme is red, green, blue brown and white.

Newspaper readers are asking two questions, "What is done locally and in the state with Christmas seal money", and "What has been actually accomplished?"

The answer to the first question will be found in a pamphlet soon to be issued entitled "Service of the Seals." 25,000 copies of this are being printed by the Board of Control of State Institutions at Anamosa and will be distributed through the Iowa Tuberculosis Association, Christmas seal chairmen and local health organizations.

According to this pamphlet Christmas seals funds are used locally for school health supplies such as first aid kits, thermometers, scales, doormats, blotters, book covers, drinking cups, paper towels, tooth brushes, height and weight cards, weight tags, measuring charts, songs, plays, pageants, stories, pamphlets, magazines, posters, chore pictures, exhibit material, books for teachers and school library such as "Health Training in Schools"; nurses' supplies such as record and inspection forms, tongue blades, eye charts, clinical and first aid material; school health projects such as essay, speaking and poster contests, Modern Health Crusade for teaching health habits, hot lunches, milk, nutrition classes, nursing inspections, dental surveys; public meetings, moving pictures, exhibits at fairs, health parades, health Sunday; county tuberculosis and heart clinics, children's clinics, open air schools, preventoria (fresh air camps), relief in tuberculosis cases, promotion of local regulations such as milk ordinances, publicity for periodic examination and other health projects such as anti-spitting, fly, open-window, clean-up and safety campaigns.

Services and accomplishments of the State Tuberculosis Association are listed as follows:

361,405 school children formed good health habits through Modern Health Crusade. 22,403 teachers conducted it. Iowa won sixth time in seven years national cup for leadership in health education; "Health Training in Schools", 402 pages, a handbook of practical teaching methods, placed in 5,200 schools; State Association helped secure passage of many important health measures by legislature; wrote the physical education law; distributed 1,200,000 pieces of health literature; loaned films to farm bureaus, etc.; helped fight animal tuberculosis through film "Out of the Shadows" and in other ways; edited monthly health magazine, "The Campaign", printed by Board of Control of State Institutions; furnished health news and features regularly to newspapers and magazines; distributed pamphlets, plays, posters, songs, exhibit material, weight tags, nurses' supplies, first aid kits, thermometers, book covers, blotters, school scales, etc.; furnished nurses for school inspections; made dental surveys; gave publicity to periodic medical examination movements and other community health projects; held county tuberculosis and heart clinics; promoted nutrition work in schools; assisted State Department of Health especially in service to public health nurses; had staff member visit every county in state for consultation on local work; aided state departments and private organizations interested in health, housing, child welfare, milk, animal husbandry, etc.; instituted occupational therapy for state sanatorium, two county sanatoria and State Vocational Board; conducted annual Christmas seal sale, a great health educational campaign.

In Iowa since the Board of Control of State Institutions and the Iowa Tuberculosis Association began their campaign against this disease the tuberculosis death rate has been reduced from 76 to 39.5. Iowa's rate is less than one-half of the average for the nation.

In 1905 in Iowa there were no state sanatoria and no county public hospitals. Now there is a state sanatorium with capacity for 400 beds and four county sanatoria. The bed capacity in this state including that of state institutions and private hospitals rates high—nearly one for every annual death, which is the standard set by the National Association, and which is attained in very few states.

In Iowa in the past five years 227,000 school children annually have either been taught health habits through the Modern Health Crusade system or have received health supervision from school nurses.

In the groups which have had the benefit of both the number of physical defects have been reduced as follows: teeth defects from 60 to 36%; tonsils and adenoids from 55 to 14.5%; vision from 12 to 8.7%; hearing from 5 to 1.5%; underweight from 60 to 20.7%.

LESSON TEXT—Isa. 5:1-23.

GOLDEN TEXT—Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How to Please God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Life That Pleases God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Life That Pleases God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Elements of Right Living.

I. Israel, the Favored Nation (vv. 1-7).

Their unique relation to God is presented under the figure of a vineyard. Observe:

1. God's peculiar favor (vv. 1, 2). God did for this nation what He did for no other nation in the history of the world. He evidenced it when He assigned the boundaries of Israel's inheritance (see Num. 34:1-13).

He gathered out the stones when the Canaanites were exterminated. The choicest vine which was planted therein was the Israelitish nation which had gone through the disciplinary process in Egyptian bondage. He built a tower in it when under David Jerusalem was made its capital city.

2. The obligation of the nation (v. 2).

The purpose of a vineyard is to bear fruit. The object of the husbandman in planting a vineyard and nurturing it is that it might bear fruit. The purpose of God in the selection and the blessing of the Israelitish nation was that it might bring forth fruit to His glory.

3. It bore only wild grapes (v. 4).

4. The desolation of the vineyard (vv. 5-7).

Since all efforts had been wasted, the owner of the vineyard now resolves to abandon it to the wild beasts of the forest.

II. The Sins Which Brought Ruin to the Nation (vv. 8-23).

The causes of this destruction are presented under six woes, each woe pronounced against a particular sin.

1. Monopoly and oppression of the poor (vv. 8-10).

The crime against which the first woe was denounced is that of the avaricious grasping after property which leads to the accumulation of wealth in the hands of the few. "Joining house to house" and "laying field to field" means the sin of the greedy monopolist who in the agricultural district takes the form of the land grabber, in the commercial centers, the form of the big men crushing out the small ones.

2. Dissipation (vv. 11-17).

The sin here denounced is drunkenness. Several features are connected with this one sin.

(1) Drinking made the life business of some (v. 11).

They get up early and continue until late at night, until their whole being is inflamed.

(2) The effort to give their hellish business a show of refinement (v. 12). This is why pleasing music is heard pouring forth from the dens of infamy over our land.

(3) Blindness to God's warnings and judgments (v. 12).

Their drinking and dissipation rendered them insensible to the dealings of Providence.

(4) God's judgments for such sins (vv. 13-17).

They went into captivity. The immediate cause assigned is ignorance, but it is a willful ignorance for which they are held responsible. They not only go into captivity, but there is great mortality among those who drink (v. 14). The records everywhere show a much higher death rate among drinking men. Drinking degrades all classes (v. 15). The country itself was made a waste (vv. 18, 19). So daring do they become that they defy the judgments of the Almighty (v. 19).

3. Moral confusion (v. 20).

This woe is pronounced against those who try to adjust moral conditions to suit their sensual appetites.

4. Conceit (v. 21).

The fifth woe is pronounced against the sin of self-conceit. Many today have become so affected by sin that they are unable to make moral discriminations. Having a false estimate of their own wisdom they plan and act without reference to God.

5. Perversion of justice (vv. 22, 23).

The sixth woe is denounced against those who are in places of justice as judges. Because of their lack of moral discrimination, and because of desire for temporal gain they cause justice to miscarry.

Treatment of Sin

Use sin as it will use you. Spare it not for it will not spare you. It is your murderer, and the murderer of the world. Use it, therefore as a murderer should be used.—Richard Baxter.

Fear of Mistakes

Some of us know what it is to be miserably afraid of making mistakes in our work. How graciously He meets this with "I will direct their work in truth."—Frances Ridley Havergal.

"A good lead dog has an extra sense—instinct for a trail. Castor has it; that's why he's our lead dog. He has brains, too."

"Where's Shot?"

"Oh, he's following the shore. If he missed us, he'll circle and get our scent."

"Won't he bark?"

"No, he was taught not to—at night. But I must make a decision."

"A decision?"

"We're near the mouth of the Kapiskau. It's going to be slow work—can you stand this till daylight?"

"What has that to do with the Kapiskau?"

"If you're tired—too tired to go on, we can stop at the post." She caught a note almost of appeal in his voice.

"Too tired," she protested, "an army nurse tired when there's a patient to take care of?"

"I know, but it's a bit dangerous, too," he said doubtfully. "Of course—I'd like to keep on—for his sake."

"Well, we'll keep on. It means making Elkwan hours sooner, doesn't it? And that counts. I can sleep on this sled. I'm almost asleep now."

"Thank you, Soldier!" he said, and stopped the team while he consulted his compass. "If I could only see that shore—the boulders."

Guthrie left the sled, and fastening a long rawhide thong to Castor's collar, cried, "Haw, Castor! We're going ashore to see if we can stumble into those boulders."

But leading his team and at intervals stopping to examine the ice from his knees, to Guthrie's surprise the dogs traveled many hundred yards without reaching the drift and the shell ice of the shore. Was he deep in the mouth of the Kapiskau? And off shore?

He had been too careful to have drifted out toward Akimiski, yet he had traveled a mile straight into the shore without hitting it. The only possible solution was the wide mouth of the Kapiskau—and he had wished to avoid getting into the river—had hoped to pass well outside. Swinging the team into the northwest, he decided to travel by compass for another mile. That would bring him into the north shore, if he were inside the river mouth. It would also— He looked toward the invisible figure on the sled—the girl who had unreservedly placed herself in his hands—who had entered on this voyage of mercy, thoughtless of self. The hands inside his mittens shut convulsively, as a warning Etienne had once given him flashed across his memory. And he had brought her—the thing most precious in the world to Garth Guthrie—into this. Why had he not camped on the Big Willow?

For minutes Guthrie walked ahead of his team, praying for signs in the ice—a gray blur at his feet—of the proximity of the shore. Then—desperate, he stood on the tail of the sled and urged his dogs into a trot, as he checked them from circling with the luminous dial he held in his mitten. For a space Castor gingerly led the team into the black wall when through the murk sounded a brittle bark.

Aroused, the yelping huskies quickened their pace.

"Shot's found the shore—he smells something," cried Guthrie to the girl in front of him. "Queer, he barked, though!"

Again the rough voice of the airedale broke through the pit-like blackness. Castor answered. With a jerk the huskies started into a fast trot. They had not traveled a hundred yards when, directly in front of the invisible team, sounded Shot's raw challenge. There was an impact of hard bodies, Castor's snarl of rage, Pollux's roar, followed by the bedlam of huskies fighting. Into the melee of enraged dogs tangled in their traces and the sled. With the handle of his heavy dog-goad clubbed, the bewildered Guthrie ran to the rescue of the airedale, who for some inexplicable reason had attacked Castor. Mercilessly swinging the heavy butt of the whip, calling the dogs by name, he blindly fought to free the offending Shot from the knife-like fangs of Castor and Pollux. A heaving mass of snapping jaws, the huskies, mad with excitement, tripped, hampered by their traces, were slashing wildly in the dark at their enemy and each other.

At last, taking a slash which rippped the sleeve of his parka as he reached it, Garth got Shot's collar with one hand and lifting the struggling dog while he clubbed the others back, dragged him from the milling team. Attempting to follow, Castor fell stunned by a blow on the skull, and Guthrie was free from the infuriated and unable, enmeshed in their traces, to drag the sled in pursuit of the airedale who fought in Guthrie's arms to return to the battle.

"Oh, what has happened?" called Joan Quarrier's frightened voice. "It was too awful. What started them?"

"It's all right. I've got Shot and he's not cut much. He'll cool off in a minute. For some reason he plied into Castor."

"Attacked Castor?"

Guthrie led his dog to the tail of the sled where he made him fast. "Yes, he must have bowled Castor over on the run. Of course that started the team. But it's so dark I doubt if any of them are hurt much. They couldn't see to strike—and their traces saved Shot. He's got two on the shoulder but they're not deep."

The girl was off the sled and soothing the airedale trembling with the heat of the fight.

"I'll straighten out the dogs now. They don't care for this whip-handle."

"I could hear the blows," she said. "It hurt, but I suppose it was the only way."

"They'd have killed Shot, if they once got him down I had to get him out of it quickly," Guthrie explained, and calming his excited dogs, soon had them on their feet with straightened traces. Castor, Garth's favorite, who had taken the bulk of the blows, found the hand of his master with his tongue as he rubbed against Guthrie's leg. Garth rumpled the erect ears of the trembling Ungava.

"Poor old boy! It wasn't your fault was it, if Shot went crazy? Don't blame you a bit, old man. I had to do it, but it's forgotten, isn't it? Yes, good old Castor!" With a pat of the massive skull, Garth went to soothe the still excited Pollux, and the rest.

But all the while his brain was busy with the strange action of the airedale. They were close to the beach. Shot had found—killed—something, and refused to share it with the approaching team. But why did he leave it?

With Shot lashed to the tail of the sled, and the heat of the combat cooled in the blood of the huskies through the soothing tones of the master's voice and the touch of his hand, Guthrie again called to his lead dog.

"Marche, Castor!"

As the sled started, the airedale broke into furious barking. Puzzled, Guthrie turned back "What's the matter, Shot?"

The dog was clearly excited about something. With a whimper he rose on his hind legs and pawed the man's chest in dumb attempt to communicate the reason for his protest.

"What is it, old boy? What's over on that shore you don't want us to see?"

"Tell me, Shot," called the girl, and the dog left Guthrie to go to her but was stopped by his leash.

"It's more than queer," said Guthrie, "it's uncanny. Well, I've got to find that shore to make a fresh start. Now, Shot, be quiet, will you?"

Again the driver called, "Marche, Castor!"

The dogs leaned into their collars and the sled started, but from its tail rose the howls of the protesting Shot.

"Good Lord, I've got to look into this! I'll be back shortly." And, stopping his team, Garth walked into the murk.

He had advanced but a short distance, doubled over the ice, feeling his way with his moccasins, when he stopped, as a chill, like the touch of a cold wind, cut through him.

"Tide crack!" he gasped. Within a step of the gray blur of ice on which he stood, a black streak, fading into the enveloping gloom, barred his way. "We're in the river mouth . . . among the tide cracks—Etienne warned me! Shot—old Shot, God bless him—he knew!

Shot's actions were clear enough now. Coming upon the open water toward which the sled was hurrying, the airedale had returned on the bound, barking a warning as he came. Then, as the dogs came on at a trot, Shot had catapulted into Castor, starting a fight and—stopping the sled. Stunned, struck with remorse, Guthrie crouched on the lip of the gash in the river ice, into which dogs, sled—all of them, would have blindly plunged but for Shot's mad attack on the team. To have led her to this—a hideous death with the dogs drawn under by the drag of the sled And Etienne had warned him of the tide cracks in the river mouths. He had intended making a wide swing around the Kapiskau, but in his search for the beach, had entered the river. But Shot, staunch old warrior that he was, had through some uncanny instinct sensed their danger and taken the only method of stopping the team. Putting her trust in Garth Guthrie, Shot had saved her He turned back to the team, thrilled with pride in the dog who worried at his leash. The love of the man for his dog had been cemented by yet one more bond. Shot had saved her for Garth Guthrie!

"What did you find?" she asked as he reached the sled.

"I learned that we'll have to backtrack straight east," he said calmly.

"Why, aren't we heading for the shore?"

"Yes, but we've got to get out of this river. When I strike the sea-ice, I'm going to circle, hit the coast, and give you some rest."

"But we ought to keep on."

"Not in this blackness. It's as thick as Flemish rain in March. I've got to lead the team," he did not add, "to watch for water ahead."

Unleashing Shot, whom he hugged as he mumbled for a space into a hairy ear, Guthrie sent the airedale out as an advance patrol. He had found water once, he would find it again if they stumbled upon another tide crack. Leading Castor on a leash, he started straight east for the sea-ice.

For an hour they walked, Shot ranging ahead while Guthrie, bent forward, eyes on the ice and his compass dial, cautiously followed. Fearful of not yet having cleared the river mouth, he led his dogs for another hour, then circled into the northwest and found the shore above Kapiskau. There he fed his dogs, cut willow and alder, and with his cedar kindling got a fire going to boil the kettles. As soon as it lightened enough to follow the coast, they would start afresh for Elkwan. After the Kapiskau, the ten-mile delta of the Attawapiskat was not to be thought of.

As Joan Quarrier sat by the comforting heat in the willow thicket, Guthrie told her the story which he had kept from her while be groped through the water traps of the river mouth.

She sat with parted lips, her serious eyes suspiciously bright, as Garth explained why Shot had hurled himself on the team.

"And you never told me what you found when you left us?"

"Why scare you? It was bad enough as it was."

She shook her head in protest. "You call me a soldier, and treat me as a woman"

"You are a woman to me—too precious to take out on a night like this and drive into a tide crack," he replied watching the light of the fire play on her brooding eyes.

For answer she called: "Come here, Shot—to me I want to kiss you."

The airedale rose, stretched, yawned, and wagged his way to her.

"But I Almost Lost You.

"There," I'll never forget what you did tonight You deserve the V. C."

With a grunt, Shot thrust his nose toward her hood

"Look out, he's trying to return the kiss," warned the man who envied his dog.

Her white teeth flashed in amusement. "You may, Shotty, on the cheek, for you're a brave and gallant gentleman"

"And the other brave and gallant gentlemen—are they to be ignored? Aren't Castor and Pollux, and—their brave and gallant master, to share in your salute, oh, mon general?"

"This general decorates but one hero tonight and that is Shot," she replied archly. "His devotion has been proved."

"And mine?"

She would not meet his eyes. "Oh, my friend," she parried, "we have work before us—a bitter fight for the life of a brave man. Why think of ourselves?"

In the lee of the sled, tipped on its side, its canvas cover stretched above her like a shed tent to reflect the heat of the fire, Joan Quarrier slept, warm in her robes, until waked by the cracking of the fire at dawn.

"Good morning, Healer of Wounds. The tea is almost ready; the bacon done; the bread cut. Will you wash your face and hands in the snow, and partake of the bounties set before you on these beautiful plates of tin?"

Through sleepy eyes the girl smiled up at the man who had labored for her comfort. "You are very good to your passenger, Mr. Exile. I shall recommend this line to all who contemplate a night voyage up this coast."

"We ought to make Elkwan by noon. I wonder what we'll find," he said, pouring the hot tea.

"Whatever we find, Maj. Garth Guthrie, you have squared your debt. No man could have done more for his friend."

"But I almost lost you—"

"That would have been the fortune of war."

"And the irony of fate, with Etienne and poor Galbraith waiting up there at Elkwan for two who never came."

CHAPTER XIII

At noon, that day, a lone figure stood in the snow on the clearing at Elkwan and searched the river-ice below the post. With a dubious shake of the head, Etienne returned to Old Anne and his wife, waiting in Guthrie's quarters.

"Yer' black night; hard to follow de shore. Something happen to M'sieu' Guthrie. Mebbe de woman not come wid heem."

"She come," insisted Old Anne. "She come w'en he ask. She come."

"Dat McDonal', he ver' seek man. She breeng de med-ceene eef she come. I go an' have a look at de trail."

Again Etienne stood on the cliff above the white Elkwan and watched for the moving spot on the ice, which would mark the approaching team. Disappointed, he was about to return to the women in the house when his keen eyes suddenly lit with excitement. Far on the white shell of the river seemed to move a black spot. For a space the half-breed studied the barely distinguishable object. Then he trotted to the quarters.

"Dey come!" he cried to the waiting women. "Dey turn de beeg islan'."

When the huskies that had traveled forty miles since daylight drew in to the cliff trail at a slow walk, Guthrie hurried to the waiting Etienne with the demand: "You got him here? He's alive?"

The half-breed nodded, then with a wide grin turned to the girl on the sled. "'Allo! You welcome to Elkwan, ma'm'selle!" as he assisted her out of the robes.

"I'm mighty glad to see you, Etienne. How are Marie and the chicks, and dear Old Anne?"

"Oh, ver' fine, t'anks. You have hard ride las' night?"

Joan and Garth exchanged smiles. "We surely did," replied Guthrie. "We camped at the Kapiskau."

"At de Kapiskau?"

Guthrie's thoughts were of the man at his quarters and he did not explain. With Joan and Savanne he hurried across the clearing.

"Well?" he questioned, as the army nurse finished taking the pulse and temperature of the man whose rough breathing filled the room.

Without answering she placed her ear to the broad chest of the man muttering in delirium. After a space she turned to the waiting Guthrie with puzzled eyes.

"I don't quite understand. Pulse almost normal, temperature only 101, respiration not high, and yet he's developed pneumonia in one lung. I can easily hear the rales!"

"You mean he has beaten the flu?"

"I think so; he's so strong. But pneumonia—"

"It hits the big men hardest," he said gloomily.

Joan gave the patient a hypodermic of strychnia and left the room to make some gruel.

"Craig Galbraith — Laughing McDonald" mused Guthrie aloud. "You gave all you had for Canada, and now Canada hunts you because a woman without eyes could see only your scars."

On her return with the nourishment, Joan found Guthrie still gazing with somber eyes at his friend.

With her well-equipped medicine kit, and her wide experience with influenza and pneumonia cases in the army, Joan Quarrier gave immediate battle for the life dependent on her care. But the problem confronting Guthrie was more complex. What was to become of Galbraith if he lived? Cameron would waste no time in taking possession of the schooner and its valuable cargo, which he would hold for the disposition of the authorities at Ottawa. But the schooner and cargo belonged to the estates of the dead men. McDonald was officially dead. He, a hunted man, could not claim it. Who, beside his wife, were his heirs? Garth did not know.

Then Cameron had said the police were coming shortly to the bay in search of the man who called himself McDonald. Failing to find McDonald's body, which Garth said he had seen on the boat, they would naturally come to Elkwan to talk to the man who brought the news to Albany. If Craig lived, he would be weeks in bed, recovering his strength. Where could they hide a man needing constant care if a police dog-team appeared on the ice below the post? Etienne could be hustled into bed and bandaged to corroborate the story told to Cameron, but Galbraith—what of him? Accessory though it made him to the crime of his friend, the gray eyes of Guthrie hardened at the thought of Galbraith, V. C., Galbraith the trench-raider, whose name was known the length of the British front, being hounded down in his dire extremity Garth laughed as he pictured the police attempting to take Laughing McDonald on his schooner in the fullness of his strength—McDonald Ha! Ha! and the bearded mate who limped, with Lewis guns and the snipers' rifles they had slept with for four years.

And Joan—he had made her an accessory as well; asked her to nurse a man she knew, now, was wanted for murder. How was he to square his conscience with that? To pay his debt to Galbraith he not only had asked her to throw her reputation to the winds, but to defy the law—Joan Quarrier, who had stepped into his life to become his world.

Nahant's Town Seal

The town seal of Nahant, Mass., is supposed to depict a white man purchasing the peninsula from an Indian sagamore for a suit of clothes or a pair of breeches.

This transaction occurred in 1630 and the white man shown on the seal is Thomas Dexter.

Dexter's title to Nabant was denied from the start by the town of Lynn, and, after a contest lasting 30 years, Lynn prevailed. The town seal, however, is based on this transaction.

Uses of Understanding

The improvement of the understanding is for two ends—first our own increase of knowledge; secondly, to enable us to deliver and give out that knowledge to others.—John Locke.

"MILLINERY CONFECTIONS" AGAIN; NOVELTY VELVET SCORES HIGH

Glitter and Color in Hats.

THE theory that millinery "unadorned is adorned th most" is passing. After so long a period of exaggerated simplicity, the feminine love for the beautiful asserts itself and once more we are to be hatted in "millinery confections" that are beguiling in detail as well as flattering in becomingness.

Evidently it is devolving upon the little brimless types to convey the message of more charm, more artful handcraft, more novelty for millinery of the future. At any rate they are doing a noble part toward creating a vogue of greater elaboration.

From the millinery collection here pictured, it will readily be seen that hats for midwinter wear are coming out strong in point of glitter and color and intriguing handwork as well as unique design.

The interesting item about the black velvet toque at the top of the group is its curious animal ornament of rhinestones. These quaint jeweled dogs, such as shown here, also birds, beetles and the like, are very much in fashion. They are really extremely smart and so ornamental that little or no other trimming is required.

A clever thing about the other hats here shown is the unique side-dip or earlap effects they display. Most of the new skullcaps trend that way.

Each of these models emphasizes the vogue for intriguing detail and elaboration. The hat to the left shows one of the flower-like ornaments made of tiniest colorful glass beads, interwoven with glittering tinsel.

Handsome beadwork and braiding beautify the velvet hat to the right. Its unique helmet-like coutour bespeaks newest fashion.

To the left below an intricate designing of gold beads and metallic threadwork transforms a simple velvet toque into a "thing of beauty and a joy forever."

The last chapeau in the group is even handsomer than the one before it, if such be possible. It reveals a clever patterning of tiny gold beads, which again stresses the elegance trend.

There's simply no getting away from velvet this season. It weaves its spell of enchantment in every nook of fashion's sphere. From gowns, wraps, formal or informal, costume ensembles sports or dressy, from negligees to hats, bags, shoes or sofa cushions, emphasis is placed on velvet in the mode—and would you believe it, Paris is now designing parasols of velvet for resort use Note this, too, if you please, in regard to the prestige of velvet among fashionables—a census of evening gowns worn at the premiere of grand opera this season in our own metropolitan cities, declares the fact that more than half were of velvet.

Furthermore velvet is writing new pages into its history which has to do with startling novelty and diversity, which is another reason why we are so intensely interested in this beloved material. Just now young girls are getting a thrill out of cunning short jackets made of multi-colored velvet print, after the manner of the "darling" model which the charming and well-known cinema artist, Marion

Attractive Ensemble and Velvet Coat

Nixon, is wearing (to the left) in the picture. This attractive ensemble stresses a pencil-blue one-piece dress with a jacket fashioned of gay-printed velvet, the patterning being very daring and very smart. That most youthful-looking fur, gray squirrel, is used for the rolling collar. The very essence of chic is expressed in this costume.

Reptile printed velvet is another of the season's sensations. Some of the most effective coats turned out recently are made of these very new and very fascinating reptile prints. The one in the picture is collared, cuffed and bordered with seal, for flat fur trimmings are the thing just now. An inset of this novelty reptile-marked velvet extends down the front of the dress from neckline to hemline. A point which emphasizes its modishness is the fact of the coat being somewhat shorter than the skirt.

Not only are novelty velvets popular for coat and jacket, but for the blouse they bespeak all that is up-to-the-moment in smartness.

One of the most successful afternoon costumes at this moment poses a blouse of multi-colored velvet over a skirt of sheer black velvet, topped with a head-fitting cap of black velvet.

HOW KLEMME GOT ITS NAME, IS TOLD

A BRIEF BIT OF HISTORY OF THE COMMUNITY WE LIVE IN

H. J. Klemme Platted The Town In The Year 1888

The Editor of The Times was asked by the Mason City Globe Gazette to write an article telling something of how Klemme go it's name and a bit of early history connected with the community. The article which will appear in the Globe Gazette will also be printed in The Times. We are greatly indebted to Mr. Aug. Barz for a greater part of the information we gathered. Mr. Barz was one of the earliest settlers in this comunity and recalls many facts concerning the history of Klemme.

At a later time the Editor of this paper intends to write a more detailed history of the comunity, and will bring in stories of actual happenings in the pioneer days. For an article of that kind we would like to have photographs and will appreciate having any of our readers supply us with any old photograph which might be in their possession. Get in ouch with us so that we may file your name for future reference

The following article gives a brief description of How Klemme Got Its Name

H. J Klemme moved to Hancock County from Alamakee in 1875 and purchased land here. In 1876 he broke the first land in this vicinity and began farming on the NE¼ of Section 31 Twp 95, Range 23 and remained in this vicinity for several years when he later moved to Belmond where he entered the lumber business with Cy Church as his partner Mr Klemme at that time was also interested in the railroad business of the Burlington & Cedar Rapids line which ran between Belmond and Hampton. Mr. Klemme died at Belmond about a year and a half ago, and Mr Church died just a few weeks ago. It was in honor of the former that the town was named.

Town Platted In 1888

In about 1888 Mr. Klemme conceived the idea of laying out a town and so platted the first NW 40 acres of the NE¼ of Sec. 31, later platting an additional part and which was later followed by the Aug. Barz addition the Gruetzmacher & Hanson addition and more recently the Morningside addition. About the time Klemme was platted Mr. Lew Lewis was doing a rushing business conducting a "hay market" about two miles north of town. A siding on the old railroad through here gave Mr Lewis an outlet for his hay, as there was no station here at that time. Later Mr. Klemme gave a strip of ground in town to the railroad for side tracks and depot and station was established.

Land Sold For $7.25 An Acre

August Barz recalls that land was sold with $1,000 for a quarter section in the old days and wihch was considered a pretty fair price, and some sold for even less. In 1875 Mr. Barz paid $7.25 an acre for a quarter section, $15.00 an acre for another in 1889, $25 an acre in 1892, $33 an acre in 1899, $45 an acre in 1901 and $62.50 an acre in 1904. This was the rapid advance in land prices during those years, but which is more than doubled in price since that, as prices paid for Hancock county land in recent years shows.

First Church In County Built

As far as can be ascertained the first real church organization was formed fifty years ago and the first church built forty-nine years ago and one half miles north of the northwest corner of what was later the town of Klemme. This church early was the German Reformed and the church they built was on the site now occupied by the Elltown Reformed Church, of which Rev. Kuhls is the pastor. However, the congregation is now housed in a remodeled, re-modeled, modern build-

First School Is Built In Ell

Mr Klemme gave an acre of ground for the first school house in Ell Township and which was built on a site in town. This was a one room structure which was later removed to the country because of its limited capacity and became the Ell Center school This building was replaced by a much larger building but which was destroyed by fire about twenty-seven years ago In its place was built another school building which now stands, but was remodeled extensively about five years ago and is now in use.

Churches Built In Town

Along about 1893-4-5 the three present church buildings were put up. Mr Klemme gave ground for the churches and parsonages for all three demnoinations The first church to be built was the English Methodist, then the German Methodist and shortly after the Reformed Church A few years ago the two Methodist churches united. Later Mr Klemme gave a block of ground to the town to be used as a park upon condition that certain sums be spent for improvements The land was accepted and as a result Klemme now enjoys a beautiful park.

Mr Schaefer and later Schaefer & Dow were the first merchants in Klemme, who conducted a general store in the building now occupied by the Swift Produce station. Dr Spickerner was about the first physician to locate here for any length of time Walt Bloom was one of the young, energetic business men in the old days For a time there was no elevator here and a man bought grain and loaded it into cars Walt bought out this man and later put up an elevator This is the place of business now of the Farmers Elevator Other business firms were rapid to spring up and the town grew

Bank Organized In 1892

What is now the First National Bank organization was then called the Klemme State Bank and was organized by Walt Bloom and other business men here and of Garner, in 1892, and Charlie Knapp was the cashier This was somewhat of a privately owned bank Later Frank Hanson, now head of the First National Bank at Garner, came from Kanawha to take the cashiership of the bank At that time Fred Arnold joined the organization and rapidly learned banking. A short time later the bank was re-organized, in which procedure Mr. Arnold was one of the leaders. The new organization was completed and formed the First National Bank of Klemme with Fred Arnold as cashier, who later became president of the institution and still holds that office at the present time

Along about the time the First National was organized, or a short time later, the State Savings Bank was organized by Walt Bloom and others and continued to operate until about two and a half years ago when it failed, and was closed.

Old town records show that Henry Terhufen was mayor of Klemme from 1897 to 1899 and E. P. Dow was the town clerk In February, 1899 G. L Bartholomew was appointed mayor to fill a vacancy and held the office until 1901, when Aug. Lau was elected mayor. E. P. Dow was mayor from 1903 to 1909 when Frank Gruetzmacher became mayor. With the exception of one or two terms Mr. Gruetzmacher was mayor until last spring when Paul Grange was elected to that office.

Three Hold Record Here

The three who have lived in this vicinity for the longest number of years are Lew Lewis and August Barz who reside in town, and Wm. Becker who lives on his farm just outside of town. They have all lived here continuously.

Mr. Barz came from Minnesota and started farming on the place on which his son, Albert now resides Mr. Lewis was in the hay business in the old days, and Wm. Becker was another farmer.

Has Old Tax Receipt

Mr. Barz has in his possession the first tax receipt he ever paid in his life and which is dated March 16th, 1876 for the amount of $14.67 in payment for all taxes on the ¼ section now occupied by Albert Barz. The tax included poll tax, personal tax and all real estate tax and was

POWER SHUT OFF FOR DAY AND A HALF HERE

Transmission Power Lines Blown Down In Terriffic Storm

One of the worst winter storms in years swept over Iowa and the North West beginning Tuesday evening with sleet, which Wednesday turned into an old fashioned blizzard that continued to rage with added force thru-out the day and night abating Thursday morning During that time the thermometer dropped to around zwenty degrees below zero with a stiff northwest gale blowing

Sleet and wind in this section of the state tore down electric transmission, elegraph and telephone lines and electric power was shut off from Wednesday morning until about noon Thursday, when repairs were made and power again turned on

The Klemme Times is entirely dependent on electric power and this shut-off of electricity played havoc with getting out he paper, and as a consequence we are somewha delayed this week.

Because of this we will be forced to leave out a greater portion of the news this week, but we will do the bes we can under the circumstances and ask our readers to kindly overlook any omissions of news, or errors

Train service has also been greatly hampered and the post mistress reports she has received very little mail from the north, only the first class mail being carried through

MRS. HENRY GRIEWE DIED TUESDAY P. M.

FUNERAL SERVICES WERE HELD AT M. E. CHURCH THURSDAY

Had Lived In This Community Over Forty Years

(By Rev. A. W. Gauger)

Mrs. Mary Anno Ell Griewe was born October 31, 1854 near Maryville, Union County, Ohio, and died Tuesday evening, December 6, 1927, at the age of 73 years, 1 month and 6 days

At the age of two years her parents moved to Rochelle, Ogle County, Ill., where she spent her girlhood days, when again in 1868 her parents were possessed of the pioneer spiri and came westward, locating about 4 miles southeast of Garner In those days automobbiles were unknown and railroad facilities were almost unavailable, so the entire distance from Ohio to Garner was made in the proverbial "Covered Wagon."

It was in a little school house in those early days in the Township that today bears her father's name, Ell Township, that she was converted to God, during the ministery of the Rev Gottlieb Haefner, and in due time was received into the Methodist Church.

October 13, 1874 she was united in holy matrimony with Mr. Henry Griewe. This happy event was duly observed after fifty years of happy wedlock, when they celebrated their Golden Wedding Anniversary in 1924.

Six children were born to them. They are Rev. Frederick C., of Center Point, Iowa, a member of the Upper Iowa Conference.

Mrs A H. Yahnke, of Garden City Minnesota; Mrs. Arthur Wellemeyer of Klemme, Miss Anna, likewise of Klemme, Johan E., of Minneapolis, Minn; Mrs Fred Ortmeyer, of Clarion, Iowa. Rev. Ortmeyeer being a member of the Northwest Iowa Conference.

Mother Griewe settled with her husband in what is now known as Liberty Township. She and her husband endured the privations and hardships of those early days, she having a victory gaining faith in a Great God she always looked on the bright side of life.

She was prominent in her community, beloved by all who knew her She was the queen of her home ever directing her household in the ways of God.

The poor and needy found it her a real friend, and the stranger was never turned away from her door.

Although it was not her privilege to participate in the great things of life, yet it was her delight to scatter sunshine and a flower whenever the opportunity presented itself.

About 20 years ago they retired from the farm and came to Klemme where they since resided. Her place was never vacant in church while her health permitted and she was active in the cause of her Master.

It was some years ago that she was stricken with an incurable malady. During this time she bore her affliction heroically and without complaint, showing real Christian fortitude. Her demise was quite sudden but the angel of death flound her not unprepared.

Her last hours wore a testimony of her living faih in God. She asking her family to join her in the beautiful hymn: "Jesus Lover of my Soul," her voice rang out clearly above the rest.

Thus there passed from this earth a life, only to be made more beautiful in that eternal home.

Her passing was a victory in the words of Paul Of her it can be said, "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of life."

Deceased is survived to mourn her passing by her aged companion who has been and at present is sick so that he could not be present at the church services; two sons, four daughters and twelve grand children as well as two brothers and three sisters, and a host of friends.

Funeral services were held on Thursday afternoon, conducted by Rev. Gauger, it being her request that he preach her sermon.

The songs which were sung at the service were chosen by her They were, "What a Friend we have in Jsus," "Jesus Lover of My Soul," and "Rock of Ages."

Her sons, sons-in-law and one grand-son acted as pall bearers.

Interment was made in the Klemme Cemetery.

Christmas Card is 81 Years Old

the First Greeting Card

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT WAS some unknown wit who made the statement recently that "Christmas greeting cards will cost this country $55,000,000, and that does not take into account the time lost in trying to remember to whom they should be sent." Although it would be difficult to estimate the value of the time "lost in trying to remember," as this wag suggests, there are those who can testify to the fact that his estimate of $55,000,000 as the total cost of Christmas greeting cards is a modest one, if not actually an underestimate.

Dealers in Christmas cards will tell you that their business has virtually doubled each successive year for the last five or six years. And the season of 1927 probably will exceed all others in the volume of sales. One wholesale dealer in Christmas cards has reported that early in November his orders had already passed the 1926 total and each week saw a steady increase over the previous week. The number of Christmas cards used in the United States long ago passed out of the realm of millions into billions.

If there is anyone who can testify to the increasing popularity of the custom of sending Christmas cards, it is Uncle Sam's mail man. He will tell you that these gay little bits of cardboard have doubled and trebled and quadrupled the burden on his back around Christmas time. Time was when you could send a Christmas card for one cent. Now it costs two cents, but not even this extra penny—which soon runs into the thousands of dollars for the coffers of the Post-Office department—has diminished the flood of cards which begins to pour into the mails at the beginning of the third week in December and continues until after January 1.

For the Christmas card is a gift in universal use for remembering one's friends at the holiday season. Rich and poor alike send them. The "social leader" has her cards of special design engraved on costly vellum and sends them out by the hundred. The working girl buys hers at the "five-and-ten" and sends them out by the dozen. Count that man poor in friendship, indeed, who has never received a Christmas card. And some complain of an "embarrassment of riches" in this regard, for the problem, as suggested by the wit in the opening paragraph of this article, is a real problem to many. How many times have you, looking through the stacks of cards that the mail man brought you during Christmas week, come across one which held your attention more than momentarily as you said, "Here's one from Mr. and Mrs. Blank. Did we send them one this year?" In fact, the custom of sending Christmas cards has become such a problem to those conventional-minded persons who have never fully realized the meaning of the "gift-without-the-giver is-bare" statement that they have declared, "Never again!" But the next year finds them adding their quota to the mountain of Christmas cards which pile up in post offices throughout the land.

Although the Christmas card is a comparative newcomer among Christmas traditions, it can by no means be regarded as an "infant industry." The figures already cited prove that. But as one regards the amazing growth of the idea, one wonders sometimes how our forefathers ever managed to celebrate Christmas without Christmas cards. For it was only 81 years ago, in 1846, that the first Christmas card—first, at least, in the sense that it was the forefather of the present Christmas card idea—was sent out. The man who originated it was Sir Henry Cole, later famous as a social and educational reformer. He had already begun applying the fine arts to manufacture and was the pioneer in illustrating children's books with woodcuts of famous paintings.

Just where Sir Henry got the idea—if it was not original with him—for his Christmas card is not known. Lover cards and illustrated writing paper had been popular in Europe for many years. In Germany illuminated cards were sent on Namenstag, the feast of one's patron saint. In 1844 some unknown person in the city of Leith, Scotland, is said to have sent out New Year's cards to his friends bearing a laughing face and the words "A Gude New Year to Ye," but since this did not have a wide circulation, it is doubtful if Sir Henry got the idea there. He may have got it from the custom of English school boys of writing "Christmas pieces" on paper which they decorated with many scrolls and much flourish of penmanship.

But wherever Sir Henry got his inspiration, after deciding to send out cards to his friends bearing his good wishes for their happiness at Christmas, he went to J. C. Horsley, a member of the Royal academy in London, for the design, and Horsley's product was that shown at the head of this article. The German influence may be seen in the Germanesque style of leafy trellises which divide the card into three panels. The smaller side panels show two of the acts of charity—feeding the hungry and clothing the naked—and the central panel shows three generations of a family party at the festal board quaffing their Christmas cheer. This card was six by four inches, colored by hand, and a thousand copies were issued. For some unexplained reason, Horsley issued his design under the nom de plume of "Felix Summerly," and the card bears the line "Published at Summerly's Hive Treasury Office, 2 Old Bond Street, London."

Since this card bears the inscription "A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to You," it can be regarded as the first holiday greeting card ever printed and sent out as the forerunner of a custom that was to become world-wide. Strange to say, Sir Henry Cole's friends were not especially pleased at this remembrance and it is said to have received much unfavorable criticism. So he did not repeat the experiment and it looked as though the Christmas card idea was to die a-borning.

However, in the early sixties ornamented note paper and envelopes began to appear in the stationers' shops around the holiday season and the use of these began to increase each year. Next these designs were stamped in relief in the center of a card with colored or embossed edges decorated by stencil or by hand. Thus the business of making Christmas cards got under way slowly. It was even slower in getting started in America and it was not until 1873 that the beginnings were apparent in this country.

In that year Louis Prang, a lithographer of Boston, exhibited samples of his flowered business cards at the Vienna exposition and they attracted considerable attention. He had an agency in London and one of his women employees there (her name is unknown) suggested to him that he put a greeting in place of the name of his firm and issue them as Christmas cards. This was done the next year, so that 1874 marks the beginning of the Christmas card in this country. It was not until two years later, however, that the Christmas card idea became widespread and this was due to the exhibits of such cards by different printers and lithographers at the Centennial exposition in Philadelphia.

Another forward step in the Christmas card business was taken in 1879 when a British company, which had offered prizes for Christmas card designs, held an exhibition of the best ones submitted in Dudley hall in London. About this time a Boston card manufacturing company held a similar exhibit at which the first prize winner was given the sum of $2,000. At the London exhibit it was learned that the majority of the prize winners were women and two of them, Kate Greenway and Alice Havers, later became famous for their Christmas card designs.

In fact, in the early years of the Christmas card business, before the great demand for them resulted in mass production and more emphasis upon quantity than quality, the Christmas card design was an important piece of creative art, so much so that it has been said that "The Christmas card enjoyed a golden age of art in the decade from 1878 to 1888." One of the reasons for this was that the exhibitions and contests which were being held by the producers of Christmas cards were stimulating interest in this form of art and uncovering many new artists.

"One of the art events of the year 1880 was a Christmas card exhibition arranged by Louis Prang at the American Art galleries," writes one investigator in the history of the Christmas card. "For several years thereafter similar exhibitions were held, with competitions in the artistic merit and popularity of the designs; and such men as Richard M. Hunt, John La Farge and Louis C. Tiffany were sufficiently interested to act as judges. The exhibition of 1884 carried a special feature. The quantity of dilettante work that hitherto had found its way to the exhibitions tended to turn away the best artists, but now their interest was deliberately sought in the hope of raising the level of Christmas card design. Twenty-two artists of first rank were commissioned to paint designs and these were purchased and entered in the popularity contest. Among those whose work was shown was E. H. Blashfield, the dean of American mural painters, and J. Alden Weir. And the collection was exhibited not only in New York, but also at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston and at the Art Institute of Chicago. But the later influx of cheapness and mediocrity proved too overwhelming for the continued interest of the best artists in Christmas card designing."

Until the eighties the illustration on the card was the main thing and the only reading matter was a simple greeting or an appropriate motto. Then poetry on the cards became popular and it became so popular that it brought into the Christmas card field several noted poets. On one occasion a London firm offered Lord Tennyson $5,000 for 12 poems of eight lines each to be used on Christmas cards, but he declined the offer. The craze for poetry became so pronounced and it was used so generously that finally the manufacturers of cards were forced to place a limit upon the verses and set that limit at 12 lines.

The religious motif also was popular from the beginning and as late as 1896 one manufacturer declared that the most popular of all Christmas card designs was a reproduction of the Nativity scene, with Murillo's Nativity as the greatest favorite. Since that time various motifs have appeared in Christmas cards until now every symbol of Christmas, contributed by every nation, appears on our Christmas cards.

Camels, the star in the east, the three wise men, palm trees, buildings of decided oriental appearance recall the scenes in Palestine where Christ was born on the first Christmas; the Yule log and the mistletoe are reminiscent of the Druids of ancient Britain; holly, plum puddings, roast beef, singers of Christmas carols, typical English landscapes remind one of the good cheer of the English observance of Christmas; jolly old Santa Claus, originally a Dutch patron saint, but now thoroughly Americanized (one Christmas card this year shows him speeding over the snowy landscape in an automobile of distinctly American make!) appears on many; the turkey is a symbol for both Thanksgiving and Christmas feasts and is a distinctly American contribution.

Nor do Christmas cards stop with Christmas symbols. Each year sees a new idea introduced with new symbols which are not especially associated with Christmas. In 1911 the Dickens centennial was echoed on the Christmas cards; the revival of interest in Americana in recent years has put all kinds of antiques—furniture, hoopskirts, muffs, bonnets, sleighing parties and husking bees—on our Christmas cards, and last year, as the result of the great interest in ship models, many a ship went sailing across the cards.

Just as Christmas cards of the past reflect the interests of Americans of those days, so do this year's cards indicate some of the major American interests now. Among them are radio and aviation, the latter, no doubt, due to the various historic flights which have thrilled the nation during the past year. Sports, too, have their place and it is not unusual to find on Christmas cards scenes illustrative of the various types of outdoor recreation. This, however, is not a new idea, since swimming, boating, cricket and tennis scenes were reproduced on English Christmas cards more than thirty years ago.

ISAIAH COUNSELS THE RULERS

LESSON TEXT—Isa. 37:5-11; 14-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee: because he trusteth in Thee.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Care for Jerusalem.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Care of a Nation.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—God the Ruler of Nations.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Recognition of God in National Affairs.

The committee has given as the scripture units chapters 7, 31, 36 and 37. It will materially help in the grasp of the lesson if brief attention be given to these chapters; therefore in the outline brief reference will be made to chapters 7 and 31 while confining the main exposition to chapters 36 and 37.

I. Isaiah's Message to Ahaz.

1. Prophecy concerning Immanuel (ch. 7).

The occasion of this prophecy was an invasion from the north by Israel and Syria. This invasion greatly alarmed Ahaz. To calm his fearful heart Isaiah assured him that God's purpose concerning the nation would not fail. He urged the exercise of faith in God, offering to confirm his faith by working any miracle desired. While with false humility he refused a sign the prophet announced the giving of a sign which would be the birth of Immanuel.

2. A promise of divine protection (ch. 31).

Ahaz foolishly called for the help of Assyria and Egypt against Israel and Syria. Isaiah rebuked him for this, showing him clearly that his only help was in God.

II. Judah Invaded by the Assyrians (Isa. 36).

1. Rabshakeh meets a deputation from Judah (vv. 1-21).

He represented Sennacherib, the king of Judah, whose mission was to induce Assyria to surrender. His method to accomplish this was:

(1) Intimidation (vv. 4-9).

He tried to bully them into submission.

(2) Misrepresentation (v. 10).

He asserted that it was useless for them to put their trust in God and even declared that the Lord had sent him to destroy Egypt.

(3) He tried to create a panic among the people (vv. 13-21). Fearing such a panic the deputation of the Jews urged Rabshakeh not to speak in the Jews' language.

(4) He promised them plenty in another land (vv. 16, 17).

2. The report to Hezekiah by the deputation (v. 22). They rent their garments in fear and dismay over their perilous condition, for the crisis long before predicted by Isaiah had now come upon them.

III. Hezekiah's Behavior (Isa. 37).

1. Resorted to the House of the Lord (v. 1).

This is a sure retreat for God's people in time of distress (Ps. 73:16, 17; 73:13). This action was prompted by faith, for God had promised that whoever in time of distress resorted to His house would be heard by Him (II Chron. 7:15, 16).

2. Sent to Isaiah (vv. 2-7).

The natural and logical thing for the king to do under such circumstances was to send for God's prophet.

3. Hezekiah's prayer (vv. 14-20).

Rabshakeh, who seems to have withdrawn from Jerusalem for a little while, now returned from Sennacherib with a letter warning Hezekiah against trusting God for deliverance, for no God was able to stand against the Assyrian army. He spread the letter before the Lord and prayed.

(1) He recognized God's throne, making it the ground of his plea (v. 16).

He reposed his faith in the lordship of Jehovah, knowing that all power and authority resided in Him.

(2) He recognized the peril which threatened the people (vv. 17-19).

(3) He asked for deliverance (v. 20).

4. Isaiah's message to Hezekiah (vv. 21-35).

(1) That Sennacherib's sin was blasphemy against the Holy One of Israel (vv. 21-23).

(2) That Sennacherib had forgotten that he was an instrument in God's hand (vv. 24-28).

(3) That judgment upon Sennacherib was imminent (vv. 29-35).

IV. The Assyrian Army Destroyed (vv. 36-38).

The angel of the Lord went forth and slew in the camp of the Assyrians 185,000 men, so Sennacherib was turned back by the way he came.

It stripped down to this: If the police found Galbraith at Elkwan Garth Guthrie was done. Cameron might fix it with the company, but the authorities would be merciless. Then the smug Charles could revel in his "I told you sos," and Ethel—he had not thought of Ethel, whose Christmas letters he had not answered, since he found Joan Quarrier on the Albany steering—she could thank Heaven for her lucky escape.

"But the police won't find him at Elkwan!" Guthrie rasped through his teeth, and went to the trade-house to make his plans with Etienne.

"Did you have any trouble getting him up here?" Guthrie asked.

"No, he holler some, but he was hushed in good."

Then Guthrie explained the part Etienne was to play when the police appeared. They would want to interview him, and must find him in bed, a sick man. Accordingly, he must have the bandages, which Miss Quarrier would prepare at once, ready to put on. The children would have to be watched and kept out of the way.

"Have you ever been badly hurt, Etienne?"

The half-breed smiled and opening his shirts, drew them back, baring a long scar across the muscular chest. "At Henley house, at de New Year dance, I get dis, manee year ago. I was ver' seek man. I know. W'en poleece dey come, I be ver' seek man once more."

Guthrie laughed outright at the gravity of his head man.

"Trust you, Etienne, to act your part anywhere! Now if we could only keep them away from my quarters, but I've got to feed them there. That's where the danger lies. He may make a noise. He'll have to have an opiate to keep him quiet. If they hear him, it's all up with us."

Savanne took the pipe from his mouth and leaned toward his chief, the muscles in his swart face knotted with the intensity of his feeling. For a space the two men hardly breathed as the narrowed eyes of the half-breed bored into Guthrie's quizzical gaze. Then Etienne said slowly: "You are good frien' to me an' my familee. I feex dese poleece—if you—say so."

Slowly, as he read the stark sincerity of the offer in the other's face—sensed that his friend of the dusky skin was bringing to the altar of their friendship the supreme gift, the hazard of his life, Guthrie's eyes softened with the affection which two years of river and coast and trail with Etienne Savanne had kindled. He reached out a long arm and took the sinewy hand of the other.

"I won't forget—my friend."

The swart face of the half-breed lit with pride at the words, then turning away, he threw over his shoulder: "I get de bandage from M'a'mselle Quarrier an' show Marie how to mak' good purse."

* * * * * * *

"His temperature's risen to 103. I can hear it in the other lung now."

Joan Quarrier entered the living room, from which Old Anne had taken the supper dishes.

"Double pneumonia!" Guthrie muttered. "Not a chance, after the flu, is there? Poor old Craig! We've done what we could."

She raised her eyes to the man who slouched, head in hands, elbows on knees. "Friendship is a very real thing to you."

He looked up. "Yes, so real that without a thought of the cost to you, I brought you into this—"

"That was rather a fine compliment to me, Mr. Exile, that you should feel sure of me—know that I would come."

"I thought only of him—of what I owed him." For an interval he was silent, then continued with a look that brought the blood to her face: "You? I knew you would come—when you understood. But it was unfair—wrong."

"Why wrong?" she demurred. "Etienne or this man, what did it matter? You needed me to help you and I came."

"But I've done worse still. If the police find him here, you'll be subject to the law—an accessory. I did not think. I was mad, but I want to get you out of this before it's too late. I'll take you to Albany tomorrow."

As Joan Quarrier stared at the speaker, her surprise slowly shifted to anger. The dark eyes lit with a look new to the man who watched. "You mean that? You think I'd desert him, dying, your friend?"

He shrugged hopelessly in the face of her determination. "You're in a false position. I had no right—"

"Stop!" she commanded, raising her head in finality. "Now, if they come, what will you do?"

For a space he could not answer, swept by a wave of pride in the staunchness of the girl of whom he had asked so much.

"I've got to feed them here. Can I keep him under an opiate?"

"Yes, he's under one now. If he grows delirious, as some do, he'll injure himself—try to get up. We'll have to keep him lashed to the bed." He will get them over to the trade-house as soon as they eat. They may not stay more than a night, but when they fail to find his body at the lumber, they'll want to see me."

"I gave Etienne his bandages and showed Marie how to adjust them."

"What a wonderful coconspirator you are, Healer of Wounds! How am I ever to repay you?" He sat from habit with the unmarred left side of his face quartering on the girl. Suddenly she straightened, startling him with the tenseness of her look.

"Why do you sit that way?" she demanded angrily.

"What—what do you mean?" he asked, confused by her tone.

"You treat me as if I were—oh, like the one he came back to." She pointed toward the adjacent sickroom.

Vaguely her meaning dawned on him. Scars— to her—were an accolade. Those straight eyes of hers never turned in horror from a wound.

"Forgive me," he said, and his eyes clouded with mist. "I knew the day I met you—that you saw beyond—the scars."

For an instant her face was radiant with a look that stirred the man with the mad desire to go to her—take her in his arms—wring from this woman who doubted him—his love, the admission that she too cared. But no, not here, his ward and guest, helpless to avoid him. His chivalry checked his impulse. She knew he loved her; she should have fair play at Elkwan.

Muttered words from the sick man drew them to his bedside. The great frame, banded by strips of cloth to confine him in his delirium, rendered the bed he lay on insignificant. His heavy russet hair, smoothed by the nurse from his wide forehead, framed the deep blue eyes which stared, unseeing at the ceiling of the room. Below leered the torn mouth, ghastly in its distortion.

"We were happy—before," they heard him mutter. "I know—I know—it was hard. But couldn't you bear it—for the sake of—the old days? Handsome Galbraith—it was—once. Then—that shell! Good-by, Handsome Galbraith!—But you—I loved—needed. Your eyes! God! the look in them—when you saw me!"

The eyes of Joan Quarrier and Guthrie met. Two tears, ignored, slowly wet her cheeks. The face of the man was twisted with pity.

"What hell he must have lived through!"

"And she—why are such creatures put into the world?" said the girl, huskily. "When his need of her was greatest—she unmasked her little soul."

Involuntarily Garth Guthrie started. How unerringly she had characterized Ethel. Had she guessed, he wondered.

"I can guess what followed," Garth replied. "I know him. Heart-broken—he often spoke of her—he went to drink, to forget. Then it happened."

"But after all, are they sure he's the man?"

"The circumstantial evidence puts it beyond question—the description, his being here in the north."

While Joan caught a few hours' sleep in the room of Guthrie which he had again given her, the factor sat beside the unconscious man, whose tortured lungs labored for breath.

Before she lay down the girl stood quizzically before the photographs which still stood in their places on his dresser.

"You're very lovely," she murmured. "It's not strange that he can't forget you. He still remembers or you'd not be here—still remembers, although he wants me to think he has forgotten."

CHAPTER XIV

In early afternoon Etienne swung back the trade-house door with a crash.

"Dog-team on de riviere!"

"All right," replied Guthrie. "Tell Miss Quarrier on your way. Now you get into those bandages and into bed, and don't have the children around if they come to talk to you."

"I am ver' seek man," laughed the half-breed and went out.

So the police had come? He hadn't expected them for days, but they must have reached Albany from Moose the day he left. They certainly hadn't lingered at the schooner with Cameron's men; mystified at failing to find the body of McDonald, they probably wanted to talk first to the men who had discovered the tragedy, then return to Seal cove.

They would pass at least one night at Elkwan to talk it over. There was no alternative to having them eat at his quarters. There lay the danger. He would rush them through supper and to the trade-house where they would sleep, as, of course, Joan Quarrier had his spare bed. Etienne's accident they would have heard of from Cameron, and Etienne and Marie were more than equal to entertaining them with the picture of a man suffering from a painful wound. The rub would come at meal time. Would the opiate keep McDonald quiet—and his breathing—would they hear it? If only he could have been moved for a day, but where? The trade-house, factor's quarters, and Etienne's were the sole heated buildings at the post. Going to his quarters, he called Joan and Old Anne.

"Anne, you can't speak English—don't answer any questions. Understand?" The broad face of the cook stretched in a smile as she winked. "Nama," she answered in Cree.

"Good! And when you hear us come in for supper, make as much noise as you can in the kitchen. Sing all you wish, rattle the pans. When you wait on us, talk to me in Cree—all the time. See? They may hear him breathe."

"Enh-enh!" replied the Cree.

"How is he now?" Guthrie asked Joan.

Her eyes reflected her anxiety. "Worse—much worse. Raging fever—105; pulse running away. He's been straining terribly at his bonds. Lucky you and Etienne made them strong."

"You gave him the opiate, of course?"

"Yes, he's feeling it now. By supper time he'll be quiet—but his breathing?"

"That's what worries me." Guthrie went to the sick room where the giant, bound to his bed by thick bandages of cloth, lay moaning in a half stupor. "Old Craig. To finish like this!" Sorrowfully, the man who was imperiling his future that his friend might have his chance went out to meet the approaching dog-team.

With Shot beside him, curious of the strange dogs, Garth watched the visitors climb the cliff trail behind their team of scrubs.

"Good day'" called the older of the two men, stepping forward with extended hand. This is Mr. Rawdon." The speaker nodded to his companion, a young, heavily built man, who shook Guthrie's hand.

"I've been expecting you," said Guthrie. "You can turn your dogs into that empty shack after you've fed them. They'll be safe there. My only assistant, as you know, is laid up."

The dogs fed and safeguarded from the big Ungavas of the post, Guthrie led his guests to the warm stove of the trade-room.

"You come straight from Seal cove?" he asked carelessly. "They were expecting you when I left Moose with Miss Quarrier."

"Dog Team on the Riviere!"

At the mention of Joan's name, the heavy face of Rawdon lighted with interest.

"Yes," replied Farrel, lighting his pipe. "We went over to the island with Cameron's people who are guarding the fur. But, of course, we wanted to talk to you and your man before we got down to work."

"Got down to work? What do you mean?" Guthrie's cold eyes studied the face of the inspector. A decent face, he thought, honest, human.

"Why we found only three bodies. Cameron says you found four, including McDonald's. McDonald's wasn't there."

"McDonald's body not there? Impossible!"

"No, we made no mistake. The Indians must have spirited it away. They tell me there's a fortune in fur on that schooner, too, but there's no sign of its being plundered."

The watchful Guthrie had his opening and lost no time in developing it.

"Why, we left McDonald dead in his berth, from flu, I suppose. Breault was in the cabin, and the other two in berths. The interpreter and a sailor they claim were on the boat must have made for the nearest camp. Did you search the ice? The Indians might have buried him. He had some Indians picking up fur for him on the island. They may have found him and given him a decent grave in the ice."

"That's true, but why should they leave the rest on the boat?"

"He was the big man—the chief. He had a great hold on them. That might explain it," Guthrie suggested. "Well, I wonder what they've got for you hungry men to eat," he added. "Make yourselves at home while I go over and ask Old Anne when she'll be ready for us."

"By the way," called Farrel as Garth opened the door. "How's your man, wound all right? He can talk, can't he? I want to get his statement."

"He's doing finely—thanks to his army nurse. She saved him from infection."

They were waiting for Garth at the house. Her eyes shadowy with strain and anxiety, Joan met him at the door.

"The morphine? Is it working?" he asked.

"He's quiet now, but I don't know how long it will last. It seems lost on him. I've given him all I dare."

"His temperature—pulse?"

"Awful! I don't see how he lives. It looks like the crisis tonight."

"I can't hear him breathe. Is supper ready? I'll bring them in and rush it through."

"Yes."

As he turned to go out he heard a sob. She stood at the door of the bedroom.

"To think he should die like this!" she said.

Guthrie strode back to her. He took a limp hand in both of his. "Healer of Wounds, I love you! Courage!" And he went out.

At the trade-house door his set face dropped its lines.

"Well, Old Anne is about ready for us. It's short variety but I hope there'll be enough for your appetites. I'm sorry, but I'll have to put you up here. Miss Quarrier has my extra room."

As Joan Quarrier, pale, but mistress of her nerves, met them in the living room with a forced graciousness and was introduced, the eyes of Rawdon bulged in patent admiration of the picture she made. Fair women are rare where life is hard, and his evident surprise at finding the ex-army nurse who had wintered at the mission at Albany of such comeliness, seemed temporarily to paralyze his tongue.

Appearing on the minute with the stew, Old Anne filled the room with the harsh sibilants of the Cree tongue.

"Don't mind Anne," Guthrie laughed, making conversation as his guests ate. "She's a bit queer in the head, but her heart's all right, isn't it, Anne?"

Anne turned upon him a chaos of chatter. From the kitchen, where she went for the boiled goose, the staunch old Cree kept up a rattle of pans, until she hurriedly returned to resume her conversation with the man whose ears strained for sounds through the shut door of the sick room.

As yet no sound from the room. Thus far—victory!

"Well," said Farrel, comfortably, as he finished, "your cook may be a bit talkative, Guthrie, but I sure have enjoyed her supper."

"Glad you have. Sorry it wasn't better."

"And you've got to run to that half-breed?" demurred Rawdon, now quite at his ease with Joan. "I don't see why you can't stay a while and talk to us."

"Oh, a nurse always puts duty before pleasure, Mr. Rawdon," she replied, with a stiff smile, as with tilted head she waited, nerves taut as wires, for the repetition of a sound she had heard—a sound incomprehensible, terrifying, from the closed room.

"Well," he laughed, "that's what I call a compliment. But you'll be back soon?"

"Back soon, you whelp!" cursed Guthrie inwardly. "If you don't finish that food, I'll choke you with it!" Then his heart skipped—to shake him with its hammering, as he heard a thud—a sound of ripping cloth. Raising his voice, he said sharply: "If you're through, gentlemen, we'll have a smoke beside the trade-house stove," and with Farrell, rose from the table where Rawdon lingered, hypnotized by the face of the girl who sat rigid with fear.

Guthrie flung open the door, admitting the biting air. "Rawdon!" The words snapped through the silent room like the crack of a whip. "Miss Quarrie has a dressing to do for Savanne." Then behind the shut door, a crash, curses, a groan froze him, desperate, where he stood. The game was up. He had lost!

"Why, what's that? Somebody in there?" demanded the younger policeman, rising, head thrust in the direction of the sounds. Gray-faced, Joan Quarrier, like one under a spell, watched the hawk-like features of Guthrie harden—saw the gray eyes grow cold, as the surprised Farrel turned to his host.

"Get Etienne, quick!" Like the ring of tempered metal the voice of Guthrie crossed to the Cree in the kitchen door. She disappeared.

"What's this all about, Guthrie—this racket in there?" stormed Rawdon, heatedly.

As the bewildered Farrel waited for Guthrie's answer, his eyes widened as he saw the groping fingers of the factor of Elkwan, who leaned against the gun-rack, find and close on the butt of his automatic.

Then with a crash the door of the bedroom was thrown back, and a giant figure, shreds of cloth hanging from naked shoulders and arms, swayed, head lowered, in the doorway. Burning with fever, the wild eyes above the grinning mouth glared with the ferocity of a mad beast at Rawdon, who instinctively recoiled from the diabolic countenance thrust toward him. Gripping the door jambs for support, the great muscles of his arms flexed, Laughing McDonald shook the room with a roar: "Give 'em the steel, Canadians! Steel for their gas! Give 'em—" With a gasp, a hoarse rumble of the deep throat, a choking cough, the massive frame pitched headlong to the floor.

On her knees beside the man whose pulse she could not feel, sobbed Joan Quarrier. Gripping the relaxed hand of the friend he had failed to save, Guthrie listened for a heart beat. There was none. Laughing McDonald had joined the silent battalions.

"He's gone?" he asked the girl, while the policemen, dumb in their surprise, gaped at the two figures with their dead.

She nodded.

"Gentlemen," Guthrie turned his face to his guests. "You are too late. Your man has escaped."

"Stan' back!"

Oksheda's Christmas

by Noni C. Bailey

"WHOSE oksheda washda daw?" was the semi-Sioux greeting of the plump little Scotch Canadian mother as the sunny-haired young laddie came running into the kitchen, where already the porridge was cooked and the tea brewing for breakfast on this, his second Christmas. She caught him in her arms and tossed him high above her head.

"Whose very good boy?" was what she had said, partly in the language she had learned from her husband. His nurse had been one of those squaws of the picturesque type still to be seen in Manitoba. In summer they come, selling wild red raspberries or choke-cherries; in winter, trudging on snowshoes into the village to visit their customers.

Hugging the little lad to her breast, the rosy mother half sobbed as she tried to say it cheerfully, "Whose oksheda washda daw?" Even as she repeated the greeting, the door swung open and a sudden gust of wind swept the fine, dry snow, like biting dust, into her face. Before her stood one of these old Indian women, apparently exhausted from a long journey through the storm.

"Oksheda washda aw?" she gasped then continued in her native tongue, "Wichyenna, you speak the language of my people. You speak the cry of my heart. Last night I read it in the rainbow-hued streamers of light from the north—th[illegible] and sang it—oksheda

The wrinkled old face twisted into a pained smile as she sank in a heap by the kitchen fire. A bit of paper fluttered to the floor from her hand. "The Great Spirit calls—it is the end of the trail," she whispered as the little mother bent over her, anxiously chafing her hands. She saw the faded old eyes suddenly brighten, then close suddenly—it was the end of the trail.

"See, see," said the little lad, holding up the scrap of paper which had fallen from the squaw's hand. Opening it reverently, the Canadian woman exclaimed, "My certe! It's an ill wind that blaws nobody guid, sure enough. Her oksheda!"

She rushed into the living room, where her "oksheda wechasta" (married boy) was lighting the candles on the scantily decorated Christmas tree.

"Look, Robert, on Christmas Day it has come The mystery and all—see! It is the oksheda's Christmas!" she exclaimed, as she gave him the crumpled paper to read.

Robert had been found when a baby by a band of Indians. Only the old squaw who had come to the end of the trail this Christmas morning knew the paper existed. All night long in the blinding snow storm she had traveled on her snowshoes—traveled that she might find some one to whom she could tell the story.

All these years she had guarded the paper, which she could not read, feeling that in some way it would bring good fortune to the oksheda who had seemed her very own little white baby She had loved him so. She was afraid to show the paper to her people—the paper she had found hidden in his clothing. She was afraid she might lose him if they knew. Then one day he wandered out of her sight and the M. P. had found him by the lake alone.

No white man was found to claim him. The Indians were afraid to. Their white brothers would ask them to explain and often their white brothers did not believe. His foster mother loved him; but she, too, was afraid. So—she hugged the bit of paper to her heart and kept silent vigil.

The M. P. took the lad home and hired an Indian nurse from the settlement to care for him. Every summer the old squaw came with her pail of red raspberries, only to grunt her thanks and look furtively about her to assure herself that all was well with the boy, then chuckle to herself as she patted her breast where the precious paper lay. In winter she would sometimes look through the open spaces in the frost-covered win-

"What is that button for?"

"That's where I ring for the servants."

"What, have you servants?'

"No, but that's no reason why I shouldn't enjoy ringing for them!"

Optional

"Mother, I want to go to a co-educational college."

"But, my dear, isn't there a good deal of flirting?'

"Yes, but you don't have to take that course."

Jews as "Easterners"

The most common surname in the Holy land, according to a Hebrew directory just published, is Mizrachi (Easterner), the people who bear it equaling in number the Cohens and the Levys together.

HOW MOVIE STAR'S VALUE IS GAUGED

To those of us who marvel at the enormous salaries paid to movie stars and wonder how the popularity which justifies these salaries is gauged, an explanation is offered in an article by Frederick James Smith in Liberty. To the question, "How do producers know they have a film favorite?" the writer answers:

"There are numerous barometers. One is the mail coming addressed to the player at the studio. This may run to 500 letters a day. There are the requests for photographs, sent to the studios themselves. The photograph bill of a favorite is a huge one. There are the letters sent to the film-fan magazine. These fluctuate, according to the popularity of the player's latest picture. Actors have been known to try to create a phony popularity by having friends write enthusiastic letters about them to the fan publications.

"Another indicator of popularity is what the exhibitor reports to the film company and to the screen trade papers Since Valentino went begging—and a dozen producers muffed a gold mine—the celluloid world has taken a lot more care in watching for box-office bets."

A Christmas Prayer

By AMY BARRON LEONARD
in Kansas Farmer

Oh God, I ask no worldly gifts,
But give I pray, memories of happiness
That I have known;
And to this add forgetfulness
Of severed ties and darkened paths.
Let me atone
For any selfish grief, by joyfulness
And smiling see, this Christmas Day,
The star that shone,
To guide the Wise Men on their way.

dows to see the candles on the Christmas tree and see her oksheda dancing with joy.

Then came the wedding, and for three years she had not known where to find the "oksheda wechasta."

The paper—ah, yes. It told who Robert was. His father had been a second son from Devonshire, who had sought his fortune in the great Northwest. It told how the young wife could not stand the hardships; how the father, too, had surrendered to the storm-king's fury one Christmas Eve; how he had cached his rich find under the rock that resembled the owl near the source of the river; how he had wrapped his greatcoat about Robert and prayed the Great Spirit to save him.

"A great Christmas for us all, Robert; but it is the oksheda I'm thinking of most. With the war come, the business gone, there wasn't to much Christmas—but now! See, I die, the storm is breaking; the sun is beginning to shine. My certe! My certe!"

"There, there, lassie, here comes the little shaver. Mind you don't him in here till I go to the store again. There are toys and things to be put on the tree. The way it's come to us on Christmas, I know we'll find the gold."

When the snows melted they made the journey together. This year, as usual, the oksheda with the golden curls and the oksheda wechasta with the black mustache are trimming the gorgeous tree that stands in the bay window of the beautiful farmhouse near the river's source. The sleigh bells jingle merrily as the car stops outside with a load of Hindian boys from the settlement, who are brought each year to share the festival of the "Oksheda's Christmas." And down by the brink of the river, the rock that resembles [illegible]

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Russia's Plan for Total Disarmament Rejected by Other Powers.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SOVIET Russia made its big peace gesture at the opening session of the League of Nations preparatory disarmament commission in Geneva, and it was far from being a success. Maxim Litvinoff, head of the soviet delegation, proposed the disbanding of all armies, sinking navies, destroying military airplanes, razing forts, scrapping factories manufacturing chemicals for war purposes, like poison gas and deadly bacteria. He thought this should be done within one year, but said his government would agree to a plan for carrying out the total disarmament gradually during a period of four years. M. Litvinoff continued:

"I have examined the schemes you have been working on and am terrified by their complexity. The mixing in of the security problem, fixing the size of army and navy the states are entitled to maintain, according to geographic position and international obligations, prove the futility of attempting to deal with the question on these lines.

"Unless the base of the negotiations is changed the disarmament conference either will break down completely or continue to waste time during the decade to come. The danger of war is not a theoretic possibility but a real imminent menace. Therefore, we propose the following resolution—commence immediately to draft a detailed project of disarmament based on the soviet proposals, and convoke in March, 1928, at the latest a general conference on disarmament."

Paul-Boncour of France and Benes of Czechoslovakia ridiculed the Russian proposition as utterly impractical and said it had been proposed by Norway in 1922, discussed and found unworkable. Both those delegates and Doctor Louden of Holland, the chairman, asserted that the league had decided that security must be linked with disarmament and that the commission's precise job at this time was to name a subcommittee to bring about that co-ordination Paul-Boncour especially dwelt on the theme that total disarmament without international pacts guaranteeing security is impossible, and reiterated the old demands for a powerful league army.

Count von Bernstorff in a general way supported the Russian plan, though he did not look pleased when Litvinoff proposed the scrapping of chemical factories. Finally it was decided that at the second reading of the draft of the disarmament plan, adopted at the last meeting, the soviets might move to have portions of their scheme examined.

It was announced that neither the United States nor Russia would be represented on the subcommission on security. Hugh Wilson, American minister to Berne, representing the United States in the conference, said: "The American attitude is simple, and consists of our intention to leave to the European states those matters peculiarly their own concern."

MEMBERS of the League of Nations council gathered in Geneva for a session that promised to be lively, with the Polish-Lithuanian quarrel and the trouble over the Italo-Albanian and the French-Yugo-Slavian treaties to be handled. Premier Mussolini once more virtually defied the league with the announcement that Italy intended at all costs to keep the Adriatic an Italian sea. He scoffed at the Serbian suggestion that the league refuse to register the Italo-Albanian pact.

"The league has a bureaucratic function of registration, and no political jurisdiction which would necessarily affect the independence of single nations," he declared. "If such a precedent were created all the treaties concluded by the powers since 1919, many of which are of a military character, would have to be reexamined."

Addressing the French chamber of deputies, Foreign Minister Briand held out an olive branch to Italy, praising Mussolini warmly and declaring it ridiculous even to suggest that anything could set the French and Italian people against each other.

Marshal Pilsudski, Polish premier, went to Geneva with the apparent intention of smoothing out the row with Lithuania. His government issued a collective note to all powers protesting against the reports that Poland is encouraging Lithuania plotters to overthrow the Smetona-Waldemaras government. The note assures the powers that "Poland does not intend in the least to endanger the independence or territorial integrity of the Lithuanian state. Poland's only wish is to establish normal, neighborly relations with Lithuania in the most peaceful spirit."

Premier Waldemaras headed the Lithuanian delegation to the league council's session and before he left Kovo he said no government of Lithuania ever could be intimidated into relinquishing that country's claim to Vilna, which was seized by Poland in 1920. Plechkaitis, the Lithuanian Socialist leader, now a refugee in Vilna, is reported to be pushing his plans for the overthrow of the Kovno government. Lithuania asserts and Pilsudsky denies that Poland is fostering this plot.

BELGIUM'S cabinet, forced to resign by the opposition of the Socialist members to the plans for national defense and army reorganization, was reconstituted by Premier Jaspar with the Socialists left out. The present government is anxious to ratify the frontiers strong[illegible] is compelled to go slowly because of the strength of the opposition. The country is prosperous, but every one is gambling madly on the bourse.

DURING the week before the assembling of the Seventieth congress the fight for and against the seating of Vare and Smith, senators-elect from Pennsylvania and Illinois respectively, became warm in Washington. Both gentlemen were on the ground, and Smith especially seemed confident that he would be seated, despite general predictions to the contrary and the assertions of leading Democrats that it would not be permitted. Vare issued a statement declaring that refusal of the senate to permit him to take the oath would be "the worst blow at representative government since the legislative machinery was first set in effect."

Gifford Pinchot, who was defeated by Vare, sent a letter to members of the Republican national committee asserting that if the Republicans in the senate voted to seat Vare the American people "will adjudge the Republican party guilty of conniving at the purchase and theft of an election and of doing so for its own political benefit." With Smith and Vare excluded, the Democrats would have one more vote in the senate than the Republicans, but if Shipstead, Farmer-Labor, votes with the Republicans, there would be a tie.

VICE PRESIDENT DAWES, interviewed by the Washington correspondents, said: "Lest there should be any doubt about it, I want to say as emphatically as I know how that I am not a candidate for the nomination for President. I favor the nomination of Frank O. Lowden, assuming that President Coolidge is not a candidate."

Al Smith's boom for the Democratic nomination was given further impetus by his indorsement by a gathering of Democratic leaders of Utah.

PROMINENT wets in the Republican party gathered in New York last week and laid plans for the campaign for modification of the Volstead act. Capt. W. H. Stayton, head of the Association Opposed to the Prohibition Amendment, told them the association would seek from both the major parties a declaration in their respective 1928 platforms in favor of a national referendum on prohibition. The declaration is to be accompanied by a pledge that whatever the outcome may be, the result shall be "in conscience binding" on all Democratic and Republican members of the United States senate and house of representatives subsequently elected. The association is planning to raise $3,000,000 to be used in connection with a nation-wide referendum on prohibition.

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE Hoover in his annual report, says the fiscal year ended July 1: "continued the economic progress which has now been characteristic of American industry for six years." The dark spots noted were the coal and textile industries, the relatively low price of cotton, and some continued depression in agriculture of the Midwest. There was little unemployment.

ALABAMA'S fight against masked violence came to an abrupt end following the acquittal in Luverne of two men accused of complicity in hooded whippings and a controversy between Attorney General Charlie C. McCall, the state law enforcement department, and the Ku Klux klan. Judge A. E. Gamble adjourned court after withdrawal by Solicitor Calvin Poole of the state's cases against 31 men remaining to be tried for participation in a score of masked lashings in Crenshaw county. The collapse of the trials followed the withdrawal of Attorney General McCall from active participation in the prosecution after he had charged the Ku Klux klan with attempting to "quiet" him in his investigation of floggings in the state.

FORMATION of the European chemical trust which is expected to play hob with American manufacturers in foreign markets, especially in South America, is well under way. Last week the Franco-German dyestuffs agreement its actual basis, was signed at Frankfort and plans were drawn for the distribution of markets, for prices and other vital aspects. The British dyestuffs manufacturers are believed to have a private agreement with those of Germany, and the organization of Belgian makers of chemicals will probably join the trust within a few weeks.

THERE was an interesting rumor in the United States that a $50,000,000 merger of several automobile concerns was soon to be formed, the Continental Motors, Peerless, Jordan and Hupp being mentioned. This was said to be the first step in W. C. Durant's plan for a huge consolidation of motor car companies. The president of Continental Motors denies that his company was involved in the merger.

MOST of the coal mines in the northern Colorado district reopened, under guard of the state troops. Among these was the Columbine mine where production ceased after the fatal battle with strikers. Reports from the southern field, where I. W. W. leaders concentrated their forces for more than a month, showed production was about 75 per cent of normal. The larger companies in that section announced employees were following their policy of avoiding demonstrations and that scores of miners were returning to work daily.

CARDINAL BONZANO, formal papal legate to the United States and one of the most eminent princes of the church, died in Rome and was buried after eleborate funeral services on Thursday. At this writing it is expected he will soon be followed to the grave by Cardinal de Lai.

Other notable men taken by death during the week were Charles B. Manville, founder of the Johns-Manville Asbestos company; John D. Griggs, former attorney general of the United States; Henry W. Savage of Boston, theatrical producer, who used to give us grand opera in English; Herbert S. Hadley, chancellor of Washington university, St. Louis, and former governor of Missouri, and Charles F. Choate, Jr., a noted lawyer of Boston.

NORTHWESTERN ALGERIA has been overwhelmed by tremendous floods that took a toll of several hundred lives and millions of dollars' worth of property. Torrential rains caused the inundation of the city of Hornell, N. Y., by the waters of the Canisteo river. No lives were lost but the property loss was heavy and railway service was suspended.

Gets $20.00 Extra for Turkeys

MODERN METHODS in all lines are supplanting the old ways.

Formerly farmers almost invariably sold their poultry alive, or if they dressed the poultry they sold it at home often to a General Store who seldom was as well posted on market conditions as the farmer is today.

THE PETER FOX SONS COMPANY, 1122 Fulton Street, are contacting with more than 65,000 poultry raisers thruout the country—advising them on market conditions, instructing them on how to properly prepare for market, where to ship, etc.

THE PETER FOX SONS COMPANY have thousands of letters testifying to the excellent returns and extra profit received from them.

Read this one.

O. G. Johnson, Hinsdale, Montana, writes: "Last year I gained $20.00 on 14 Toms by shipping to you. That is $20.00 more than local man offered—so I shall pass him up again and ship to you."

If you have turkeys, poultry, or veal to ship—ship direct to THE PETER FOX SONS COMPANY, CHICAGO, where you are guaranteed the top market price of day of arrival for kind and grade of poultry less 5% and transportation charges.

Ship or write them today. This firm has net resources of more than three-quarter million dollars.—Adv.

Airplane Helps Ranch Manager Direct Work

The first plantation to be "bossed" from the air, says the New Orleans Times-Picayune, is a 6,500-acre ranch in Tulare county of southern California. By means of an airplane the entire place is kept mapped by aerial photography, so that progress and needs in the various fields and sections may be handled from the main office without the need of constant visits, inspections and reports.

The ranch keeps 500 men employed and it is of the utmost importance that their labor be directed with the minimum of friction and duplication. The pictures, taken from as high as 9,000 feet, give comprehensive views of crop progress and without moving from his seat in the ranch house, but by glancing over the aerial map, the manager can make daily assignment of his men to the various parts of the work.

Railroads No Longer Yield to King Frost

Special snow-fighting locomotives have been adopted this winter by several Eastern railroad yards to clear the switches of snow, reports Popular Science Monthly. The engines are equipped with nine pipes, arranged in a "V" just behind the cowcatcher, to spurt live steam directly beneath it and melt the hardest snow and ice. One large railroad has 25 of its locomotives equipped for this duty.

Another way of keeping switches clear of snow is that recently adopted by a New York elevated railroad. It has built into the switch rails automatic electric heating coils that operate whenever the temperature falls below a certain point.

Horse Saved Companion

The spectacle of a young horse towing an old companion through the flood waters near Burlington, Vt., was witnessed by refugees on higher ground, according to an Associated Press dispatch. As the horses struggled, the old horse finally began to falter, slowed up and started to sink. The young horse, swimming beside him, paused as if uncertain what to do. Suddenly the black head reappeared above the crest of the flood and the old animal set his teeth in the young gray's mane. With a mighty tug the young horse started again for the bank, towing his exhausted companion. At last he reached shallow water and human friends drew both animals ashore.

Toy Balloon Went Far

A tiny toy balloon made a 300-mile air "hop" in three days. The craft took the air one Saturday night, according to its owner, O. C. Inman of Nashville, Tenn. Inman tied a slip of paper to the balloon asking the finder to write to him. After a week had gone by, Inman received a letter from Hubert Mitchell of Lavonia, Ga., 300 miles away. It read: "I found a balloon about one mile out of Lavonia one afternoon with your address on it. It had a small hole in the bottom and looked as if it had been melted by heat. It came down at sundown in a pasture."

Singer's Reply

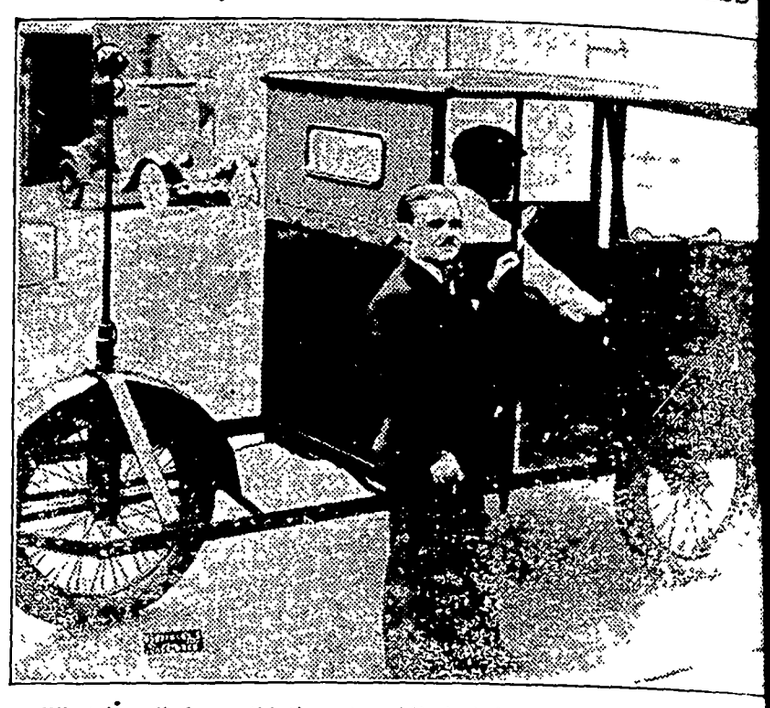
Stories about John McCormack continue to drift in. It seems that when the tenor returned from Europe last time, reporters met him at the pier and told him that Deems Taylor was writing another "command opera" for the Metropolitan.

"Is that so?" said McCormack, much interested. "And what will this one be about?"

"A well known commercial subject," returned one of the reporters.

"Ah," said McCormack, smiling, "Otto Kahn?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

ATHLETIC AUTOMOBILE IS MOTORLESS



What is called an athletic automobile is being used by Elmo DeVora, his manager, P. DeCarmo, in touring the United States. DeVora is a walker and the athletic automobile is pedaled by hand and steered by the feet. DeVora contends that by using his hands and shoulders it conditions him as an athlete. The photograph shows DeVora inside the car with his manager outside.

AGAIN ADVOCATES ROAD COURTESY

Giving of Proper Signals in Intelligent Manner Is Often Overlooked.

Highway courtesy and co-operation are ideals that constantly are laid before motordom in the campaign for safer highways. One of the chief difficulties standing in the way of their attainment by motorists generally is the failure of their advocates, in too many instances, to define precisely what is meant by the term says a statement issued by national headquarters of the American Automobile association.

"As one of the most enthusiastic and persistent advocates of these ideals, the American Automobile association has submitted a questionnaire to its clubs executives in 928 communities in an effort to get an accurate and up-to-the-minute definition of courtesy and co-operation between motorists," says the statement.

Signals Are Important.

"Co-operation and courtesy apparently begin with the giving of signals," says the statement. "Virtually all of the replies to the questionnaire emhasized this point and, undoubtedly, a large majority of motorists will agree with its primary importance. For with millions using the nation's highways, it is obvious that one driver cannot, with safety, leave another in doubt as to his intentions. The carelessly given signal is almost as bad as no signal at all. Yet many thousands of motorists do not realize that they are being discourteous, to say the least, when they fail to give the signal that is clear.

"The giving of signals does not stop with those involving the extended arm," the statement points out. "Parking lights are very important signals that frequently are overlooked, the A. A. A. finds. To leave a car without a light to inform other motorists of its presence is to invite them to what may be physical disaster. From this, it may be seen that there is much more to using the parking light than merely escaping a visit to traffic court."

Many Ways to Co-Operate.

In actual operation of the car on the street or highway, there are many ways to co-operate. These are known to virtually every driver, but many fail to make use of their knowledge in co-operating with other motorists, the statement says.

Yosemite Park Records Broken for This Year

Surpassing all yearly attendance records, Yosemite closed the 1926-1927 travel season on September 30 with a total of 490,430 visitors, an increase of 79 per cent over the year previous, when only 274,209 visitors registered at the various park entrances.

A study of the travel season just closed reveals 444,786 persons entering the park in motor vehicles, as compared to the 234,567 visitors that were brought to Yosemite during the 1925-1926 travel season in 74,970 motor vehiclese.

Park authorities are positive that the phenomenal increase for the season just closed is due primarily to the new all-year road enabling the automobile owner to drive to Yosemite 365 days in the year.

Gasoline Evaporation Spoiled Station Profit

Gasoline service staion owners in New Jersey lost approximately $50,000 through evaporation and leakage when they attempted to take advantage of the 2-cent tax on gasoline which became effective in that state on July 1 last. Several weeks before the tax went into effect retail distributors stocked up, as all gas delivered before July 1 was free of tax. It is estimated that while some dealers made a profit by pocketing the 2 cents, the loss to some of the bigger concerns was heavy.

Chinese Jay-Walkers Are Being Educated

Chinese jay-walkers are being educated by professional story tellers, employed by the government, who deliver talks on the Shanghai streets. Here's one of their tales:

"Now, the swift motor car and the clanging street car are just like tigers, and if you do not take care to watch the police man at the corner and obey his signals you will not live to grow up and acquire many sons, but will be killed, and your sons, too, so that your ancestral [illegible] lets will be untended. The road is like a tiger's mouth; from its center keep away."

Homemade Heater Melts Snow on a Windshield

No wiper will keep your windshield clear when snow freezes to everything it touches. Then you must apply heat to melt the snow. The illustration shows a homemade hot-air heater applied to the exhaust pipe. A fan arrangement with the opening toward the fan forces air through the slot up an old vacuum-cleaner hose and out the nozzle, also a vacuum cleaner part. The air keeps the glass above the freezing point, enabling the wiper to work. Some experimenting will get the nozzle the right distance from the glass.—Popular Science Monthly.

Auto Can Stop Quicker Than a Fast Locomotive

A traffic expert states that a train running only 40 miles an hour requires 1,320 feet in which to stop, whereas the ordinary motor car running at the same speed can be stopped in 93 feet and it requires but a few seconds. It can plainly be seen from this that the burden of avoiding accidents rests almost solely with the motorist. The engineer of the locomotive is powerless, regardless of his vigilance, precaution and skill. About all he can do is pull on the whistle cord and shudder as some one "races" him to the crossing.

AUTOMOBILE HINTS

California reduced its motor fatality record 12 per cent last year.

Howe About—

By ED HOWE

Bell Syndicate. WNU Service.

Men have long contended that they are groping in the dark; this is one of their most common mumblings. The light of thousands of years daily illuminates their way.

The great truth is that men are not well behaved, and that those who behave best get along with most comfort and ease.

In every phase of life, from feeding to learning, from manners to money, here is the sermon preached by deity, bishop and layman; it is a fact so universally known that, before engaging in stealing, a thief preaches honesty.

To prosper as well as we may, to complete our lives as comfortably and easily as possible, it is only necessary for man to accept his own preaching.

A book recently sent me contains a picture of a grinning skull, and under it the words: "What's the use?" A foolish picture and question. If a bear takes after you, why run? If you break a leg, why have it set? The What's the Use philosophy is only dismal and foolish. We are here, and should take as good care of ourselves as is possible as long as is possible.

Years ago there was general indignation because a certain Doctor Osler said all human beings were old at forty, and should be chloroformed to get them out of the way of those still able to carry on. A very ridiculous statement, of course; many are useful at forty and far beyond. But it would have been sensible had Doctor Osler suggested that certain worthless people be selected, and chloroformed at any age. The shiftless and idle, the criminal, the hopelessly foolish who do nothing but make trouble for those more worthy.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes once wrote a health rule that has been quoted so often I may be condemned for printing it again. It is to get an incurable disease, take care of yourself, and live forever. It was his way of emphasizing the important fact that wonders may be accomplished, easily and pleasantly, by "taking care of yourself."

One often hears of the great fight being made by Capital, and the inference is usually given that Capital is fighting for robbery, spoils.

The truth is, the great fight of Capital is for the sacredness of obligation, for industry. Capital is a thing that cannot prosper in a country where there is only rioting and idleness.

Capital is not heard of among savages; it is an instrument of civilized and progressive peoples.

A surgeon lately told me a woman called on him and wanted her gall bladder removed. He asked her where she got the notion. She replied that a neighbor woman told her that she had heard of a woman who did not feel well, had her gall bladder removed, and thereafter enjoyed health. "No one appreciates," said the surgeon, "how many operations we refuse to perform."

There are so many indiscreet memoirs in print of late that many are inquiring: "Shall they be suppressed?" And just as you are thinking of writing yours!

Men and women do not get along well. The quarrel is mainly about money. A woman never seems to care much because her husband isn't as much of a lover as when they were first engaged. She doesn't expect it; and realizes she has cooled off, too. We have learned that these things are natural, but men are still shocked at the extravagance of women, and women are still shocked at the stinginess of men. Is there any way of coming to a better understanding on this subject of money?

I like five-thousand-a-year men. Nearly all of them are in line for promotion to ten-thousand-a-year jobs. And when they reach that goal they may reasonably hope for twenty thousand, fifty thousand a year. Nearly every five-thousand-dollar-a-year man is a comer, and has ability and character. Among the thousand-dollar-a-year men, one finds many who are not worth the pay they are getting, but the five-thousand-dollar men are worth more, and will get it. A twenty-dollar-a-week man finds it difficult to get a job, but there is clamor among employers for the five-thousand-dollar men.

There is only one reason men like women, although the women believe there are several hundred.

APPEAL OF LOVELY LINGERIE; SATIN CONTINUES POPULARITY

Of Indestructible Voile.

LACE generously contributes its prettiness to the styling of dainty underthings this season. According to those who cater to the woman who loves pretty lingerie (and where is the woman who does not?) filmy underapparel is the call of the hour. From the outlook of holiday displays there is going to be a lacy lot of dainty gowns and dance sets, chemise, step-ins, pajamas and the like delivered by Santa Claus this Christmas. As the Yuletide gift ideal, women everywhere cast their vote for lovely lingerie—which is a good thing to remember during these harried, hectic days of Christmas shopping.

Not only is lace used in abundance, but it is employed in such unusual ways. For instance, the diagonal trimmings, so popular for the blouse and the frock, are achieved with lace for the voile or crepe de chine gown or perhaps for the blouse of dainty lace-trimmed pajama sets.

Deep, fancifully styled lace yokes are especially a feature of designing for filmy or crepe satin nightgowns. The picture shows an introduction of such a yoke. This gown is of indestructible voile, a material very much liked, being exquisitely sheer. Another item of interest in this lovely gown is the hemline which is finished with a wide net footing. Most of the new gowns show a flounce of net or of dainty lace around the bottom.

Insets of lace at the waistline in a sort of girdle effect are also characteristic of this season's designing.

Two Lovely Satin Gowns.

Lace in deep points plays an attractive part, too, being especially effective in the formation of hemlines for panties as well as gowns. In regard to the newer designed panties, every device is resorted to, in order to maintain a slender hipline. Deep flat-fitting yokes are an approved styling.

Summing up the style items featured by the new lingerie, those outstanding are: An abundant use of lace; materials themselves being very sheer, filmy and colorful; a generous use of both fine knife and box-plaiting with much attention being paid to uniquely designed deep yokes and fanciful hemlines.

Satin will radiate its lovely sheen throughout the winter mode. In fact, the fashionist is growing more and more enthusiastic in regard to satin. Paris acclaims it not only for daytime dress, but most ardently for evening wear, especially the white satin frock of classic drape. A gown of white satin recently worn by a Parisienne of high degree, carried a cluster of snowy gardenias at shoulder and hipline as its only adornment.

This being very much of a black and a white season in Paris, it follows that black satin styled with utmost simplicity has become the idol of fashionables for daytime wear. The model in the picture is a representative type of all that is best among high-class costumes. Notice that the skirt is tiered and then draped at one side, which is a very popular styling this season.

The other charming gown is beige and it accents the effectiveness of crepe satin used in reverse. This girlish model is two-piece and its satin (shiny side out) skirt has just enough of a flare to be stylish. The blouse cleverly alternates the luster and the dull side of the satin, the little bows supplying the final beguiling touch.

A color that is selling beyond all precedent in satin, is brown, especially chestnut brown and cinnamon shades. As said before, trimming is conspicuous by its absence on these frocks of satin. However, any lack of embellishment is made up for by the intriguing manipulation of the fabric itself. Jabot drapes, uneven hemlines, clever necklines and many soft bows tied of the material contribute their charm.

A fascinating feminine aspect is given to these winsome satins, with the use of exquisite lace at wrists or at neck or in a side cascade. One is impressed with the choiceness of the laces employed for this purpose.

Time's Passage Not Reckoned in Hours

An English astronomer has advanced the thought that "time does not, in fact, exist." It is rather difficult for the human mind to comprehend such a theory, says Thrift Magazine.

Longfellow, in "The Hyperion," asked the question: "What is time?" and answered it in this manner: "The shadow on the dial, the running of the sand—day and night, summer and winter, months, years, centuries; these are but arbitrary and outward signs, the measure of time, not time itself. Time is the life of the soul."

The theory that time "does not pass," or, as men say, "fly," is not a new one. There is in an ancient graveyard in New York a tombstone containing these lines:

Time flies, 'tis said,
Nay gossip, say not soe,
Time stays, we goe.

Nathaniel Hawthorne, in the "Marble Faun," wrote: "Time flies over us but leaves its shadow behind."

Fashion and Good Breeding

A circle of men perfectly well bred would be a company of sensible persons in which every man's native manners and character appeared. If the fashionist have not this quality he is nothing. We are such lovers of self-reliance that we excuse in a man many sins if he will show us a complete satisfaction in his position, which asks no leave to be of mine or any man's good opinion.—Emerson.

Revised Version

The seven ages of man have been well tabulated by somebody or other on an acquisitive basis, thus:

First age—Sees the earth.

Second age—Wants it.

Third age—Hustles to get it.

Fourth age—Decides to be satisfied with only about half of it.

Fifth age—Becomes still more moderate.

Sixth age—Now content to possess a six by two strip of it.

Seventh age—Gets this strip.

for taxes for the 1875. Mr. Barz has kept the record in good condition and displayed it at the Times office.

He recalls that John Maben was treasurer at that time, who was an uncle of O. K. Maben who now resides in Garner. Mr. Bailey was the Recorder and Mr. Doolittle, Clerk. The court house was then located at Concord, a mile south of the present court hose.

Newspaper Started In 1887

The Klemme Times was founded in 1887 by John Kline and M. A. Bell and was first published in the building now ocupied by Jim Thomas' barber shop. Since that time a dozen or more men have published the paper and the present editor perhaps holds the record for staying the longest, being publisher for a little over ten years.

Klemme, A Good Place To Live

Klemme is a live little town, surounded by a rich farming, dairying and livestock comunity, with a large percentage of the farmers their own land owners Klemme has good schools and churches, excellent markets for grain, livestock, produce and dairy products. Klemme has one of the largest creameries in the northern part of Iowa. We are served by transmission electric power lines, a municipal water plant, a modern telephone system. Klemme has a complete sewerage system and disposal plant. Klemme business men carry a full line of goods in their stocks and sell at a small profit.

AUXILIARY REPORTS ON WORK DONE

KLEMME LEGION AUXILIARY VERY ACTIVE PAST YEAR

Responded Liberally To Number Of Calls For Worthy Causes

Mrs. P. W Johnson, Historian of the Klemme Unit, of the Auxiliary to the Adam Schaefer Post, No. 625 gives us the following report for publication of the work done by the local Auxiliary for the past year of activities. The report follows:-

Klemme had a full quota of twenty five members in 1927, with Mrs Paul Grange as President.

At the first meeting a monthly contribution of two dollars was voted to the Child Welfare Work.

A home talent play was sponsored by the Klemme Unit from which was realized the sum of $67 83 Half of this sum was turned over to the Legion

The unit also held the annual poppy sale and collected $30.70 from this source. The usual percentage of this sale was sent to Headuarters and the balance given to the local post.

Give Aid To Flood Victims

For the Refugees of the great Louisiana flood disaster they purchased the material and made four complete layettes, collected $80.55 from the residents of Klemme which was forwarded to Headquarters, also made two sheets, two pairs of pillow slips and six hand towels for the same worthy cause

Bought three subscriptions to the Iowa Legionaire and presented one to the Klemme Public School, and one each to the Gold Star mothers.

Receives Citation For Good Work

A delegate and alternate was sent to the state convention at Fort Madison, where the Klemme Unit was one of forty to receive citation for work done in the past year.

During the summer three lunch stands were managed by the Auxiliary, realizing about $25.00.

About $15 00 was spent for flowers and fruit for the sick.

Received President's badge from Hancock County for having largest attendance at County Meetings.

Two pairs of curtains were made for the veterans hopsital at Knoxville. A box of cookies was sent to this institution.

Fifty three pounds of used clothing were collected and sent to Headquarters for relief work.

An Americanization Chairman has been appointed and an essay contest to close in December is being conducted in the town and surrounding community.

The Klemme Unit has done considerable work in the Legion Hall, purchased a new stove for the kitchen, some kitchen utensils, a Congoleum rug, curtains and light fixtures.

They have given four parties, one for the Legion and Auxiliary members and their families, one for a member who was leaving, presenting her with a remembrance gift, one for the Camp Fire Girls, and another for the Legion and Auxiliary members.

One member who lives in the country invited the Unit there for dinner and to spend the day.

A complete history of the Unit has been made and sent to the State Historian.

Remember Soldier At Xmas

At Christmas last year a package was mailed to a soldier in Texas. He will be remembered this year again and when another name is sent this year this box will be mailed also.

A cradle roll has been organized with fifteen members.

Klemme has paid her per capita tax for 1928.

At a recent election only two changes were made in the elective officers, and these two only because they did not wish to keep the office.

Klemme Unit is entering upon her third year of work and have plans made to do as well and maybe a wee bit better than in the two just past.

Submitted b Mrs. P. W. Johnson, Historian of Klemme Unit 1927-1928.

V. COOK HAS HIGH HERD IN C. T. A.

COWS KEPT OUT OF CORN FIELD SHOW UP BEST IN REPORT

V. A. Cook Also Has Highest Producing Cow For Month

Three hundred and nineteen cows were on test in the twenty-five herds ested for November in Cow Test Association Number Three. Out of this number twenty-nine cows produced over 40 pounds of butter fat, and eleven over 50 pounds Two cows were culled out as unprofitable and sold for beef. The Association averages based on the 319 cows on test, 239 in milk and 80 dry, were:

Average Milk	478 lbs.
Average Fat	18.2 lbs.
Average Feed Cost per pound of Fat	20.7 cents.

It is interesting to note that the herds which are kept in out of the corn stalk fields in a protected lot are the ones which are producing the most milk and butter fat. It is a universal plan for most dairymen to turn their cows in the stalk fields. It is doubtful if this practice is a profitable one. Ear corn and corn stover could be utilized by other kinds of livestock with less hardship.

The highest average for herds was made by the P. B. and G. H. herd of V. A Cook, of Goodell. This herd of fifteen cows, ten in milk and five dry, made an average of 817 lbs. of milk and 31.1 lbs. of fat.

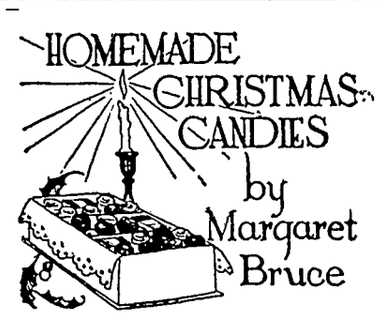
M. T. Love, of Garner, was second with his herd of P. B. and G. G. Fifteen cows in milk and one dry made an average of 582 lbs. of milk and 30.1 lbs. of fat.

Louis Quintus with a herd of ten G H, nine in milk and one dry, made an average of 771 lbs. of milk and 29.2 lbs. of fat.

Emil Beier, of Garner, with his herd of eleven P. B and G. H.. nine being in milk and two dry, made an average of 812 lbs. of milk and 28.9 lbs. of fat.

V A Cook had high cow for the month. Grannie, a G. H. having produced 2415 lbs. of milk and 95.2 lbs of fat.

Jean, a P. B. H. owned by M. T. Love produced 1125 lbs. of milk and 62 3 lbs of fat.



ANOTHER of the ceremonials that make home such a likeable place at Christmas time is the making of the pretty, colorful candies to decorate the table, or fill small boxes and baskets for neighbors and friends to whom one wishes to give a little something more than a card.

A cold wintry evening is just the time to indulge in this festivity, and if a neighbor or two should be invited in to help, so much the jollier. Tie bright checkered aprons on the men and make them do the preparatory work, such as cracking the nuts and getting the meats out whole, chopping citron, squeezing lemons, cutting angelica into strips, and halving red candied cherries.

Meanwhile at one side-table sits the lady with the fondant—that base of all the cream candies—stirring the confectioner's sugar, moistening it to the right consistency so that it will make round soft balls, and then either dipping it in boiling chocolate or stuffing it with nuts, cherries, citron, or bits of fig paste. It can be used to stuff dates, taking the place of the stone, the dates then being rolled in granulated sugar. Oh, there is no end to the decorative, luscious goodies that can be made from this cream foundation.

To make these candies look like Christmas, the liberal use of green and red is advised, either in the fondant itself or in the trimming. A box of coloring matter can be obtained at any grocery, the colors being green, pink, violet and orange. You can put a bunch of holly on a white cream by cutting wee leaves of green angelica and tiny bits of candied cherries, pressing them into the cream before it hardens. A tiny green pine tree can be cut and pressed into the top of a cream.

When these pretty Christmas candies are packed into little gay baskets or painted tin boxes, they make the most attractive sort of gift to send around the neighborhood to nearby friends, or to give the Christmas caller. In addition, the fun of making them in the company of a kitchenfull of family or neighbors makes a preliminary Christmas party that is nearly as delightful as the day itself.

For Wrapping Gifts

Fascinating hand-blocked papers from various lands are used as wrapplugs for Christmas gifts and in place of the usual ribbons there are thin paper ribbons in gay and festive colors.

THREE words meaning more to more people than almost any other greeting or salutation or phrase. Three words fraught with significance.

There are the happy people. Families where affection, cheer, joy in one another, unselfishness toward one another, love and sympathetic understanding flourish.

They know the full meaning of A MERRY CHRISTMAS.

There are the almost-happy people. People who sometimes bicker and quarrel, make speeches only half-meant which sound twice as harsh. Christmas comes and they rouse themselves. After all, there is happiness for them. The wives with loving slyness make little sacrifices and buy the husbands gifts they know will be acceptable. The husbands rush at the last minute into gaily decorated shops, purchasing those gifts they know will be acceptable. They have paid more attention of late. They have noticed what was missing, what was wanted. Arriving home a little late the very sound of their steps has a new crispness, their voices joviality and affection.

They jog themselves up. They have A Merry Christmas.

There are the poor families, buying what toys they can for their children who have the same eyes as all children. Eyes which see doll's carriages, trains of cars, dolls, mechanical toys, books. Eyes which look deeply into the windows of shops. Perhaps those more financially fortunate will lead them into shops and let them realize some of their dreams.

There are the charity children, children who receive dinners given by charitable organizations, being photographed so that those who are independent may feel undisturbed by all that they possess. Children whose pictures reveal at times a little shame, a little shyness that they must be photographed when eating a regular meal. And yet they know the meaning of Christmas, too. This, for them, is good luck. Perhaps it can be made better.

A Merry Christmas.

Three words—but synonymous with those three words are many others—children, children's gay, excited, happy voices, parents with home-coming sons and daughters, gifts and generosity. Christmas trees, appealingly empty stockings left by the trustin, on Christms Eve, cordiality, true humanity.

A Merry Christmas.

FORMER KLEMME MAN FUNERAL TODAY

GEORGE MUSFELT DIED TUESDAY EVE AT CLARION

Funeral Services Held At Clarion Today

The people of Klemme were sadly shocked when it was learned that a former young Klemme man, George Musfelt, had died at his home at Clarion Tuesday evening.

George is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Musfelt of this place and a brother of Mrs. Hattie Lanaham.

Mr Musfelt had contracted diptheria and seemingly was making a fair recovery when complications set in causing trouble with his heart and we understand, it was this latter ailment which caused his death.

Funeral services were held at Clarion today.

Besides his wife and children, Mr Musfelt leaves to mourn his death his parents, two sisters and a brother.

The Times expects to give further details next week.

The sympathy of the entire community is extended to the relaives at this ime.

Now Ways To Use Cranberries

With the cranberry season in full swing, new ways of using this popular fruit are in demand Two new ways suggested by the Home Economics Division of Iowa State College are as sherbet or in frozen form

The ingredients for cranberry sherbet are: 1 quart cranberry pulp, 2 cups sugar, juice of 1 lemon, grated rind of an orange.

Add sugar to cranberries while still hot. Cool, add lemon juice and grated rind of orange. Freeze.

Frozen cranberries may be made without a freezer and may be preferred by some to sherbet.

Pick over and wash 4 cups cranberries, add 1½ cups boiling water, let boil 12 minutes. Skin during cooking, rub thru sieve. Cool nd fill to overflowing one-fourth pound baking powder cans with the mixure. Pack in salt and ice, using euqal amounts. Let stand four hours, slice and serve with the main course of dinner.

BASKET AND PIE SOCIAL

Baske and pie social will be held at Ell Center, Fri., Dec. 16. A community play, "Her Ladyship's Niece" will be given. 2 mi. east and 2 mi. north of Klemme. Bertha Johnson, teacher; Louis Newberger, director. 2tc

WILL PLAY BELMOND FRIDAY NIGHT THERE

LOST FAST GAME TO BRITT LAST FRIDAY NGHT HERE

Will Play Garner There After ... Vacation

Our basket ball team put up a good fight against Britt last Friday night but lost. The score was 17 to 11. The Britt boys were more experienced and more rangy and had a better eye for the hoop. The experience last pear in pracice with Britt's championship team has fitted them ably for this season's basket ball, and they are our superiors to-date. But our lads played a good brand of ball and will continue to improve

Wil Play At Belmond Friday

We go to Belmond on Friday evening of this week and hope to make a good showing. On Tuesday evening of next week, Crystal Lake will be here to take our measure if they can. We must defeat Crystal Lake We play Garner, at Garner. on January 6th

We have no game scheduled on January 13 as that is the date set for our local declamatory contest. Following this date we have at least one game each week until the County Tournament, Feb. 24 and 25

Program Next Wednesday

An unpretentious program is in process of preparation by our school principally by our grade children, to be given on next Wednesday afternoon, a Christmas program to parents and friends are invited will begin not later than 2 o'clock As was announced last week all the columns school will then close and will be called again on Jan. 4

Our teachers will leave the same evening in several directions: some going south, some northwest, some northeast, and one southwest. All will try to forget school cares for near two weeks and we hope return in good fettle for the remaining 5 months of the school year.

A Miss Mabel Schott of Mason City, a graduate of the Northwestern University College of Public Speech has been engaged to give a week's training to our declamatory contestants after our return from the holiday vacation. She will assist Miss Trumbell who has them nicely started, but who lacks the time to do the most for each

PLEASE SHOP EARLY

There is a simple way to make this Christmas twice as merry, and the New Year doubly happy, too. There is a way to eliminate much confusion, disappointment and inconvenience that so often attend the giving of gifts.

Shop early! It should not be necessary to tell our people that early shopping means a larger selection of merchandise, time for mailing and distribution. It should not be necessary to explain that early mailing means the relieving of a terrific strain on the postal service and the people themselves who shop

Yet this information seems necessary and Postmaster General New says: "The government would be grateful if you would shop early, wrap carefully, address plainly and mail promptly."

Bad Banking

Woman who placed $1,200 in an old stove for safe keeping is now having a bit of difficulty in collecting from the government on the ashes. This home banking idea is two of the nine foolish thoughts that find human lodgment.

CHRISTMAS—An International Holiday

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

DURING all the centuries that have elapsed since the birth of Christ gave to what are now known as the Christian nations of the world the occasion for celebrating one day in each year in honor of Him, there have become associated with that day a host of symbols, traditions and customs, contributed by the various countries, which have made it, more perhaps than any other red letter day on our calendars, an international holiday. We Americans are somewhat prone to place Christmas in the same category with the distinctively American holidays of Fourth of July, Memorial day, and Thanksgiving day, without always realizing that we are only one of the many peoples who are celebrating it.

It is a curious fact, too, that associated with this "Christian holiday" are many symbols and traditions of pagan origin. The date itself, December 25 (which is now universally accepted as the birthday of Christ, although there is no exact historical record to establish that birthday), is derived from many sources, all antedating the Christian era by many centuries. In fact the historic background for that date is the earliest period in the history of mankind, dating as it does from the time when primitive man first began to recognize the phenomena of the changing seasons in relation to his own life.

One of these was the winter solstice on December 21 which was observed with festivity in Persia, China and Egypt in ancient times. In some parts of China they still hold a thanksgiving feast on December 21 without knowing the reason for it. The ancient Egyptians ate goose (the historical precedent for the Christmas goose or turkey of the present day) for dinner in honor of the winter solstice. It is a curious coincidence that the symbol for goose in the Egyptian hieroglyphics is the same as the symbol for child, so that there is something of an analogy in the Egyptian celebration of the winter solstice and the Christian celebration of Christmas in honor of the Christ child.

In ancient Rome the winter solstice was also celebrated, because when the shortest day of the year was over and the December sun began to climb its upward course, the Romans thrilled to the promise of coming spring. The festival they held was in honor of their god Saturn and at that time they prepared a feast which they called the Saturnalia. There were gifts and merrymaking and banquets of true Roman magnificence and their temples were decorated with flowers and green branches. Under the reign of the Caesars slaves were liberated and were licensed to dine with their masters; prisoners were not punished for their misdeeds and war never was declared. Truly it was a time of "peace on earth, good will to men."

When the Romans invaded Britain they brought with them their customs and found that the celebration of the Saturnalia was somewhat similar to a celebration held at approximately the same time by the pagan Britons, especially those of the Druid priesthood. In these rites the mistletoe, which was held sacred by the Druids was cut from the sacred oak with a golden sickle by the prince of the Druids. Later when the mistletoe was hung in the farmhouses the young men had the privilege of kissing the girls under it, plucking, at each kiss, a berry from the spray. When the berries were all plucked, kissing time was over.

So it was from these pagan Druids that we received the mistletoe as a symbol of Christmas, as we did also the custom of burning the Yule log. The Scandinavians, from whom we get some of our Christmas customs, also had the Yule log and burned Yule fires in the night in honor of Thor, the thunder god. The Yule log has survived as one of the principal features of the modern English observance of Christmas and around it has grown up a number of traditions or superstitions of its own. In northern England it is believed that if a squinting person or a bare-footed person comes into the house while the log is burning, it is an omen of bad luck. They also put away the brand remaining from the Yule log very carefully for use in lighting the Yule log on next year's Christmas fire.

Just how all of these customs came to be associated with the Christian holiday, celebrated in honor of the birth of Christ, cannot be definitely determined, for the merging of customs of different races and nations is such a gradual one that it is impossible to assign definite dates for the origin of many traditions. The early Christians frowned upon the pagan ceremonies held at the time of the winter solstice, yet they could not prevent their invasion of their own holy days. In the earliest days of the Christian era Epiphany, January 6, the day Christ was supposed to have been baptized, was observed by the followers of the new religion and eventually the observance of December 25 as Christmas grew out of a sort of compromise between Epiphany, January 6, and December 21, the day of the winter solstice and the high holiday of the pagans. Gradually the Christian Christmas began to replace the pagan festivals and the principal holiday of the winter season began to be observed on December 25. However, a part of the Greek church still observes January 6, ignoring December 25, while the Russians, because of their adherence to the Julian calendar observe Christmas some 13 days later than do other peoples.

Although the first observance of December 25 as Christmas has been lost in obscurity, it is said that Julian I, bishop of Rome from 337 to 352 A. D., established the festival at Rome some time between those two dates and it is probable that by the Fifth century the date was pretty well established throughout the Christian world. King Arthur is believed to have held the first Christmas day festival in Britain in the city of York in 521 A. D. This festival lasted for several days and so appealed to his people that it became an annual custom. It was about this time, too, that the association of the mixture of Druid and Roman symbols and traditions began to appear in the Christmas celebrations. The Christians saw with alarm the association of what they considered heathenish rites with their own ceremonies, but they were powerless to check the growth of the alien influences and the importance of the festival gradually grew until there occurred an event which seemed to the Christians a just rebuke for the increasing importance of the pagan traditions. In 878 King Alfred was holding high revelry on Christmas day when he was surprised by the Danes, his army cut to pieces and he himself became a fugitive.

In 1223 there was an important Christmas celebration staged by St. Francis of Assisi in a grotto near Greccio in the Abruzzi mountains of Italy. There was a pageant at midnight, portraying the Nativity, and Thomas of Celano, who was among the worshippers, writes that they saw a smiling babe appear in the arms of St. Francis as he bent over the manger. The report of this miracle spread over the land and a convent was built there to commemorate it. Giotto painted a picture of the incident and this celebration and this picture did much to give us our present-day ideas of the Nativity of Christ.

By the early Middle ages, Christmas had become the greatest of the annual festivals and, although in some countries, notably England, the pagan elements of the celebration still existed, for the most part the Christian element was emphasized. Churches were decorated and plays concerning the Nativity were given. Carols were sung in the streets and images of the Virgin and Christ were carried about from house to house. There was feasting and merrymaking, too, as well as religious ceremonies.

In the England of Shakespeare's time the Christmas festivities were very elaborate, lasting until Twelfth day, or Epiphany and during this time there was no work of any kind. So the "Merrie Christmas" of Old England became established. Then came the period of the Puritans whose straight-laced ideas gave them a keen distaste for Christmas festivities, especially those in which the pagan elements were most evident. So they prevailed upon parliament to prohibit such celebrations and Christmas was made a day of fasting and prayer instead of a day of feasting and fun. But after the Restoration the old celebrations came back, somewhat subdued for awhile, but eventually rather similar to what they had been before.

If the "Merrie Christmas" of Old England with its Yule logs, mistletoe, holly, cheery Christmas carols, Christmas cards, plum puddings and mince pies and all of the other elements which combine to make it a season of gayety, have served to change the original character of the holiday, it is equally true that other countries have contributed other traditions which help make it a joyous season. Germany has contributed the Christmas tree and Martin Luther is said to have been the first to set up a Christmas tree in that country. Holland has contributed the jolly old Santa Claus as the symbol of cheerful giving and the custom of hanging up Christmas stockings in which he is to put his gifts. The latter is an outgrowth of the custom of the Dutch children of placing their wooden shoes in the chimney corner on St. Nicholas eve (December 6) when the spirit of the good St. Nicholas (they called him Sinterklaas, which later became Santa Claus) made his rounds and left his gifts for them. This custom of hanging up stockings is also said to have originated in Russia from two customs. In east Russia, among the peasantry, there was a custom whereby a young girl discovered through divination whom she would have for her husband and the traditional formula in this custom was "Come and take my stockings off." Among the professional classes parents placed money in the stockings of their children at marriage as a gift for the other partner.

Although Holland is usually credited with being the contributor of Santa Claus, as a matter of fact, this symbol of Christmas is a composite character and under a variety of names he is a legacy from a number of nations. In Holland he is Sinterklaas, or San Nicolaas; in Germany he is Kriss Kringle, a derivation from Krist Kindli, the Christ Child; and in France he is Bonhomme Noel or Pere Noel, Father Christmas. And in Italy, the children believe that he has a companion on his annual trip, a sort of Mrs. Santa Claus whom they know as La Befana, probably a modification of the Italian word for Epiphany.

But it must not be supposed that any one of the Christmas customs has been contributed by any one country exclusively. In nearly all of the Christmas traditions there are contributions from several nations and every country claims a share in most of them. America, the youngest of all nations, has inherited its Christmas customs from all of them, but it has, so we believe, improved upon many and contributed one or two of its own. The principal one, of course, is the Christmas turkey, for the turkey is "all-American." But as evidence of the fact that Christmas is truly an international holiday, consider these words of one writer on the history of Christmas: "We eat the Egyptian's goose—it may have changed to a turkey in America—as a sacrifice to the sun, they tell us. We hang the mistletoe of the Druids, burn the Yule log of the Nordic pagans. Holly, some authorities say, is our own, symbolizing the crown of thorns the Christ wore to Golgotha. The red berries are drops of blood. We drink the wassail bowl, some of us, handed to our lips by the Vikings. We decorate the sacred oak which, by the grace of St. Boniface, is an evergreen. We await the coming of the Germanic Santa Claus for our gifts. And we chant 'peace on earth, good will to all men,' which, after all, is the most important."

Romances of Industry

More than 60 subjects involved in the romantic task of taking wealth from underground are depicted in a series of motion pictures prepared by the bureau of mines, says Popular Mechanics Magazine, and elaborate equipment, including portable lighting facilities that furnish 12,000,000 candlepower, has been devised for the task. One of the illuminating units is a huge searchlight somewhat like that used on airplane landing fields. Fifty trunks of lighting apparatus are employed. In filming the "Story of Copper" many of the reels were taken 8,000 feet below the surface.

Unfortunate

An amusing story of how a newspaper contents bill once passed an unintentional criticism on Sir Austen Chamberlain, the foreign secretary, is told by Sir Edward Iliffe, M. P. Mr. Chamberlain (as he was then) made a speech in a Midlands town on the same evening as a gas explosion had occurred. The newspaper bills next morning read: "Mr. Austen Chamberlain's Speech. Remarkable Escape of Gas."—London Tit-Bits.

Tides in Earth's Surface

Like the seas, the earth's crust rises and falls in tides as a result of the attraction of the sun and moon, Dr. Walter D. Lambert, scientist of the coast and geodetic survey, asserts. These movements have never been measured, says Popular Mechanics Magazine, because instruments for the task have not yet been devised and complicated computations are involved, but scholars have established the existence of such movements beyond all reasonable doubt, he declares.

Both Right

I lately complained of a lady who took the pronunciation "to-may-to" out of my mouth, and called it "to-mah-to."

A gentleman writes we are both right. One of the best modern dictionaries gives "to-may-to" the preference; in fact, says "to-may-to" is the proper pronunciation, in the United States; the English prefer "to-mah-to."

Here it is again; two people on exactly opposite sides of a question, and both right.

I have noticed it in many other things.—Howe's Monthly.

World's Population

The population of the world is estimated at 1,906,000,000 by the World Peace foundation on the basis of figures prepared by the League of Nations. Former estimates usually placed the total population of the earth at between 1,600,000,000 and 1,700,000,000. Such estimates are naturally conflicting, inasmuch as in many parts of the world, such as in the interior of China, no census is ever taken. However, these figures probably represent the population of the world in a general way.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Freak Golf in Scotland

A freak golf match was played recently in Scotland. It was an 18-hole course and the players agreed to meet by moonlight. They started at 9:30 p. m., accompanied by spectators. No one could see the ball when it left the tee, so all stood in strained silence trying to hear it drop. Two brave men, all in white, went ahead lighting matches to give the players a clew to the right direction. They escaped with their lives, although a ball passed between the feet of one of them. The balls were traced with the aid of electric flashlights. The match ended at 12:20. Not a single player made a hole in one, the match going to the expert who achieved a hole in 93.

PRESIDENT VIEWS NATION'S AFFAIRS

Chief Executive Deals With Prosperity and Peace in Message to Congress.

Washington.—The text of the President's message, in part, delivered to congress, follows:

It is gratifying to report that for the fourth consecutive year the state of the union in general is good. We are at peace. The country as a whole has had a prosperity never exceeded.

Wages are at their highest range, employment is plentiful. Some parts of agriculture and industry have lagged; some localities have suffered from storm and flood. But such losses have been absorbed without serious detriment to our great economic structure.

Stocks of goods are moderate and a wholesome caution is prevalent. Rates of interest for industry, agriculture and government have been reduced. Savers and investors are providing capital for new construction in industry and public works. The purchasing power of agriculture has increased.

If the people maintain that confidence which they are entitled to have in themselves, in each other and in America, a comfortable prosperity will continue.

Stern Self-Denial Is Urged.

Without constructive economy in government expenditures we should not now be enjoying these results or these prospects. Because we are not now physically at war, some people are disposed to forget that our war debt still remains. The nation must make financial sacrifices, accompanied by a stern self-denial in public expenditures, until we have conquered the disabilities of our public finance.

While our obligation to veterans and dependents is large and continuing, the heavier burden of the national debt is being steadily eliminated. At the end of this fiscal year it will be reduced from about $26,600,000,000 to about $17,975,000,000. Annual interest, including war savings, will have been reduced from $1,955,000,000 to $670,000,000.

The sacrifice of the people, the economy of the government, are showing remarkable results. They should be continued for the purpose of relieving the nation of the burden of interest and debt and releasing revenue for internal improvements and national development.

Not only the amount, but the rate, of government interest has been reduced. Callable bonds have been refunded and paid, so that during this year the average rate of interest on the present public debt for the first time fell below 4 per cent. Keeping the credit of the nation high is a tremendously profitable operation.

The immediate fruit of economy and the retirement of the public debt is tax reduction.

The annual saving in interest between 1925 and 1929 is $212,000,000. Without this no bill to relieve the taxpayers would be worth proposing.

The three measures already enacted leave our government revenues where they are not oppressive. Exemptions have been increased until 115,000,000 people make but 2,500,000 individual taxable returns, so that further reduction should be mainly for the purpose of removing inequalities.

The secretary of the treasury has recommended a measure which would give us a much better balanced system of taxation and without oppression produce sufficient revenue. It has my complete support.

Probable Surplus Small.

Unforeseen contingencies requiring money are always arising. Our probable surplus for June 30, 1929, is small. A slight depression in business would greatly reduce our revenue because of our present method of taxation.

The people ought to take no selfish attitude of pressing for removing moderate and fair taxes which might produce a deficit. We must keep our budget balanced for each year. That is the corner stone of our national credit, the trifling price we pay to command the lowest rate of interest of any great power in the world. Any surplus can be applied to debt reduction, and debt reduction is tax reduction.

Under the present circumstances it would be far better to leave the rates as they are than to enact a bill carrying the peril of a deficit. This is not a problem to be approached in a narrow or partisan spirit. All of those who participate in finding a reasonable solution will be entitled to participate in any credit that accrues from it without regard to party. The congress has already demonstrated that tax legislation can be removed from purely political consideration into the realm of patriotic business principles.

Any bill for tax reduction should be written by those who are responsible for raising, managing and expending the finances of the government.

For National Defense.

Being a nation relying not on force, but on fair dealing and good will, to maintain peace with others, we have provided a moderate military force in a form adapted solely to defense.

It should be continued with a very generous supply of officers and with the present base of personnel, subject to fluctuations which may be temporarily desirable.

The five-year program for our air forces is in keeping with this same policy and commensurate with the notable contributions of America to the science of aeronautics. The provisions of the law lately enacted are being executed as fast as the practical difficulties of an orderly and stable development permit.

While our army is small, prudence requires that it should be kept in a high state of efficiency and provided with such supplies as would permit of its immediate expansion.

Our navy is likewise a weapon of defense.

We have a foreign commerce and ocean lines of trade unsurpassed by any other country. We have outlying territory in the two great oceans and long stretches of seacoast studded with the richest cities in the world. We are responsible for the protection of a large population and the greatest treasure ever bestowed upon any people. We are charged with an international duty of defending the Panama canal.

To meet these responsibilities we need a very substantial sea armament.

We can plan for the future and begin a moderate building program.

We have a considerable cruiser tonnage, but a part of it is obsolete. Every one knows that had a three-power agreement been reached it would have left us with the necessity of continuing our building program. The failure to agree should not cause us to build either more or less than we otherwise should.

A rapid growth is taking place in aeronautics. The Department of Commerce has charge of the inspection and licensing system and the construction of national airways. Almost 8,000 miles is already completed and about 4,000 miles more contemplated. Nearly 4,400 miles is now equipped and over 3,000 miles more will have lighting and emergency landing fields by next July.

Air-mail contracts are expected to cover twenty-four of these lines. Daily airway flying is nearly 15,000 miles and is expected to reach 25,000 miles early next year.

The importance and benefit of good roads is more and more coming to be appreciated. The national government has been making liberal contributions to encourage their construction. The results and benefits have been very gratifying.

National participation, however, should be continued to trunk-line systems.

Conditions in the Philippine islands have been steadily improved. Contentment and good order prevail. Roads, irrigation works, harbor improvements and public buildings are being constructed. Public education and sanitation have been advanced. The government is in a sound financial condition.

These immediate results were especially due to the adminstration of Gov. Gen. Leonard Wood. The six years of his governorship marked a distinct improvement in the islands and rank as one of the outstanding accomplishments of this distinguished man. His death is a loss to the nation and the islands.

Greater progress could be made, more efficiency could be put into administration, if the congress would undertake to expend, through its appropriating power, all or a part of the customs revenues which are now turned over to the Philippine treasury. The powers of the auditor of the islands also need revision and clarification.

Views on Agriculture.

The last year has seen a marked improvement in the general condition of agriculture. Production is better balanced and without acute shortage or heavy surplus.

Agriculture has not fully recovered from postwar depression. The fact is that economic progress never marches forward in a straight line. It goes in waves. One part goes ahead while another halts and another recedes.

Everybody wishes agriculture to prosper. Any sound and workable proposal to help the farmer will have the earnest support of the government. Their interests are not all identical.

Legislation should assist as many producers in as many regions as possible. It should be the aim to assist the farmer to work out his own salvation socially and economically. No plan will be of any permanent value to him which does not leave him standing on his own foundation.

It is useless to propose a temporary expedient. What is needed is permanence and stability. Government price fixing is known to be unsound and bound to result in disaster. A government subsidy would work out the same way. It cannot be sound for all of the people to hire some of the people to produce a crop which neither the producer nor the rest of the people want.

Price fixing and subsidy will both increase the surplus instead of diminishing it. Putting the government directly into business is merely a combination of subsidy and price fixing aggravated by political pressure. These expedients would lead logically to telling the farmer by law what and how much he should plant and where he should plant it, and what and how much he should sell and where he should sell it.

The most effective means of dealing with surplus crops is to reduce the surplus acreage. While this cannot be done by the individual farmer, it can be done through the organizations already in existence, through the information published by the Department of Agriculture, and especially through banks and others who supply credit refusing to finance an acreage manifestly too large.

It is impossible to provide by law for an assured success and prosperity for all those who engage in farming. If acreage becomes overextended, the government cannot assume responsibility for it. The government can, however, assist cooperative associations and other organizations in orderly marketing and handling a surplus clearly due to weather and seasonal conditions, in order to save the producer from preventable loss.

It is necessary to preserve the public confidence in this system in order to find a market for their bonds.

Careful supervision is absolutely necessary to protect the investor and enable these banks to exercise their chief function in serving agriculture.

The Mississippi Disaster.

For many years the federal government has been building a system of dikes along the Mississippi river for protection against high water. During the last season the lower states were overcome by a most disastrous flood. Many thousands of square miles were inundated, a great many lives were lost, much live stock was drowned, and a very heavy destruction of property was inflicted upon the inhabitants.

It is necessary to look upon this emergency as a national disaster. It has been so treated from its inception. Our whole people have provided with great generosity for its relief. Most of the departments of the federal government have been engaged in the same effort. The governments of the afflicted areas, both state and municipal, cannot be given too high praise for the courageous helpful way in which they have come to the rescue of the people. If the sources directly chargeable cannot meet the demand, the national government should not fail to provide generous relief. This, however, does not mean restoration.

The people in the flooded area and their representatives have approached this problem in the most generous and broadminded way. They should be met with a like spirit on the part of the national government.

No required relief should be refused. An adequate plan should be adopted to prevent a recurrence of this disaster in order that the people may restore to productivity and comfort their fields and their towns.

Legislation is desirable for the construction of a dam at Boulder canyon on the Colorado river, primarily as a method of flood control and irrigation. A secondary result would be a considerable power development and a source of domestic water supply for southern California.

Enforcement of Prohibition.

After more than two generations of constant debate, our country adopted a system of national prohibition under all the solemnities involved in an amendment to the Federal Constitution.

In obedience to this mandate the congress and the states, with one or two notable exceptions, have passed required laws for its administration and enforcement.

This imposes upon the citizenship of the country, and especially on all public officers, not only the duty to enforce, but the obligation to observe the sanctions of this constitutional provision and its resulting laws. If this condition could be secured, all question concerning prohibition would cease.

The federal government is making every effort to accomplish these results through careful organization, large appropriations, and administrative effort.

The federal authorities propose to discharge their obligation for enforcement to the full extent of their ability.

Legislation authorizing a system of fuel administration and the appointment by the President of a board of mediation and conciliation in case of actual or threatened interruption of production is needed.

The miners themselves are now seeking information and action from the government which could readily be secured through such a board.

It is believed that a thorough investigation and reconsideration of this proposed policy by the congress will demonstrate that this recommendation is sound and should be adopted.

It has been suggested that the various governmental agencies now dealing with veterans' relief be consolidated. This would bring many advantages. It is recommended that the proper committee of the congress make a thorough survey of this subject, in order to determine if legislation to secure such consolidation is desirable.

For many years it has been the policy of the federal government to encourage and foster the cause of education. Large sums of money are annually appropriated to carry on vocational training. Many millions go into agricultural schools. I am still of the opinion that much good could be accomplished through the establishment of a department of education and relief, into which would be gathered all of these functions under one directing member of the cabinet.

It is the policy of the United States to promote peace. We are a peaceful people and committed to the settling of disputes by amicable adjustment rather than by force. We have believed that peace can best be secured by a faithful observance on our part of the principles of international law, accompanied by patience and conciliation, and requiring of others a like treatment for ourselves.

We should continue to promote peace by our example, and fortify it by such international covenants against war as we are permitted under our Constitution to make.

Philology Tells Story of Long-Vanished Race

Somewhere, and so long ago that it is equally impossible to say when, there dwelt in Europe or Asia a most remarkable tribe of mankind, says a writer in the Kansas City Times. These people are not mentioned in any ancient history and no legend gives a hint of their existence. Not even an authentic grave of one of its members can be traced.

Yet this ante-legendary race has been raised from the dark past and displayed in its ancient shape until modern historians know as much of it as of many peoples yet living. The words spoken by that mysterious race, the gods it worshiped, the laws it made, the character of its industries and possessions, its family and political relations, even the conditions of its intellectual development and its racial characteristics, are all well known.

These people were the fathers of the so-called Aryans, who in growing numbers swelled beyond the boundaries of their ancestral home and went forth to conquer and possess the earth. Knowledge of this ancient race has been brought about solely by workers in comparative philology—the study of words. Word by word the language of the original Aryans has been exhumed from the descendent modern languages until, pieced together, they tell the story of a vanished people.

Famous for Ability to Design Furniture

Important as an influence on furniture forms of Eighteenth century America was the work of the four Adam brothers of England, chiefly the work of Robert Adam, whose influence on the furniture of England from 1760 to 1780 was marked.

He was a man of means, a traveler, but he was not a cabinet maker. He never made a piece of furniture in his life, though it is on his furniture that his fame rests. When he designed a house he also designed the furniture to go in it, even going so far as to mark chalk spots on the floors to show where each piece of furniture was to stand. His designs were painstaking, exquisite in the spirit of antiquity, says Sarah Lockwood, author of "Antiques."

He drew his inspiration directly from ancient Pompeii, uninfluenced by his trip through France. His furniture legs were straight, his lines were straight, his backs round or oval. His decoration was purely classic; he often employed the well known classic urn. Adam may have snubbed Chippendale, for not one trace of Adam's influence is found in the other's work. —Exchange.

Islanders Evade Tax

Eddy island, off the coast of Galway, Ireland, is so close to shore that its few inhabitants can observe boats leaving the maluland and prepare an appropriate reception for visitors. Nobody on the island has paid anything toward the maintenance of the Galway county council for years, and the last time bailiffs landed the inhabitants repulsed them. Little possibility exists of seizing the cattle on the island as they are driven to almost inaccessible hiding places when bailiffs appear. The islanders owe the county about $100,000.—New York Times.

YES!

According to 11,105* written opinions from Doctors

WHAT is the quality that Lawrence Tibbett, David Warfield, Nazimova, William Collier, Florence Easton, Mary Boland, Sophie Tucker and other famous singers, actors, broadcasters and public speakers have found that makes LUCKY STRIKES delightful and of no possible injury to their voices?

For the answer we turned to medical men and asked them this question:

Do you think from your experience with LUCKY STRIKE cigarettes that they are less irritating to sensitive or tender throats than other cigarettes, whatever the reason?

11,105* doctors answered this question "YES."

These figures represent the opinion and experience of doctors, those whose business it is to know.

"For a number of years, I noticed that Lucky Strikes were the overwhelming popular cigarette with most actors. It was only natural, when I started to smoke, that I try Lucky Strikes. Now I know it is rightfully called 'the actors' favorite.' It is the most enjoyable cigarette and results in no throat irritation or harshness and this means everything to us of the stage."

CHRISTMAS IS ONE HOLIDAY OBSERVED BY MOST NATIONS

Americans are somewhat prone o look upon Christmas as a holiday in the same class with such distinctively American celebrations as Memorial day, Fourth a July and also Thanksgiving, without realizing that it is one of the oldest festivals in history and that we share its observance with many other peoples.

In fact, so many nations have contributed to its traditions and the customs and symbols associated with it that it is truly the mos "interrational holiday" of all. There's an interesting artice on that theme in this issue of The Times that you will enjoy reading. Look for "Christmas, an International Holiday," by Elmo Scott Watson, in this issue.

Christmas Comes

Once A Year

—and this gives every one a special opportunity to remember relatives and friends.

What could be a more acceptable gift than one that will be a constant regular reminder of the Giver?

Something that would lighten labor or brighten and beautify the home; as for example a new Bridge or Floor Lamp; an electrically operated Radio bringing the entertainment, news, and education of the world inside your doors; an Electric Heater for those chilly mornings before the furnace has thoroughly heated the house; an Electric Range, a Vacuum Cleaner, Electric Refrigerator, an Electrically operated Washer, Electric Iron or Ironer; and the multitude of Electric appliances that aid and comfort, and many of these at prices within the reach of all.

Also the Gift that grows with the years without worry, bother, or care of any kind.

The 7% Preferred Investment Certificate paying Dividends EVERY THREE MONTHS, and a SURE SAFE GUARD against the need for money.

Make this the Christmas that will not be forgotten by giving such Gifts as these and your Chrismas Gift Fund will be well invested, and a joy to those remembered.

Our stores have these gifts and any employee may receive your order for the 7 percent Preferred Investment.

REV. GAUGER PERFORMED TWO MARRIAGES WEDNESDAY

Bridges And Beier, Bobo and Hanson The Couples

A sort of pre-Christmas rush in marriages took place in this community yesterday, Wednesday, December 14th, when three couples were married in the community.

At 3.30 p. m. at the Methodist parsonage Mr. Elmer B Beier and Miss Faye Bridges were unitede in marriage by Rev. A. W. Gauger. Mr. Orville Bridges, brother of the bride and Miss Ruth Swanson were witnesses of the happy event.

Both of these fine young people are well known in the community and their many friends wish them a most happy journey through life.

Shortly folowing the first ceremony Rev Gauger again answered the door bell of his home to find a young couple from Titonka wishing to be married, so at 5:00 p. m. Mr Herman H. Hanson and Miss Ada Bobo both of Titonka, were made husband and wife Mr Lawrence Bobo and Miss Mary Hanson also of Titonka were the witnesses.

Schlawin-Bowlen Marriage

Wednesday afternoon, December 14th Mr Henry Bowlen and Miss Helen Schlawin were united in marriage the Rev A Schmid performing the ceremony

The bride is a daughter of Mr and Mrs Otto Schlawin of Liberty Township and was raised in this community She is a delightful young lady and possesed of a fine personality The groom is a fine young man of good character who will make his chosen one an ideal husband

A reception was given the young couple at the Schlawin home Wednesday evening, which was attended by a great gathering of young folks who came to make merry and wish their friends lots of joy and success in their journey through life.

The Times offers congratulations and hearty good wishes to all of these young couples.

The Hurry Season

The holiday season, the shopping time of the year, is upon us. Youn will want to purchase many things for Christmas The stores in Klemme are teeming wth gft suggestons, so that your every need may be nicely supplied And don't forget that those who avoid the last minue rush of Christmas shoping have occasion to congratulae themselves Read the ads in this and past isues of the Times for valuable aid in selecting suitable gifts. A New Year Decision

by Katherine Edelman

IT WAS to be a wonderful New Year for the Feltons. At least, it would be for Blanche Felton, but Raymond Felton, her husband, was not quite so sure about the matter, although he never breathed his doubts to a soul. Their new residence on Allan street was all finished and they were to move in before the New Year.

Blanche was excited beyond measure; she would have the finest home of all her friends; for the new house, planned to be a rather moderate home in the beginning, had somehow developed into a rather pretentious structure. That this had been all due to her, Blanche had never stopped to think, and Raymond, easy-going and adoring Blanche as he did, never told her. He wanted her to be happy and this had really been the first thing he had ever seen Blanche so set upon; up to now she had always been very moderate in her demands. And she deserved a fine home, if ever a woman did!

But Raymond Felton was worried. He confessed to himself that he could not figure out exactly how they were going to keep the place up. He must try and make some extra money in the next year. But how? he asked himself

At home Blanche was singing loudly as she went about her work. It was two days after Christmas and she was packing all the little odds and ends about the house preparatory to the big move. A loud ring at the doorbell brought her downstairs. Outside stood a man and woman, strangers to Blanche. They stated their mission as soon as they entered. Somebody had told them about the new house on Allan street and they wondered if there was a possibility that it was for sale. Mr. Gray was coming to town as manager of the big Delmar company, and as they had quite a family they needed a large home and were willing to pay a good price. They had already looked all over town and could find nothing to suit their needs.

Blanche told them that the house was not for sale; that they had built it for their own home, and that there was nothing like it in town. She talked at such length and aroused their interest in so many of its new features that Mr. Gray asked her if he might take a look at the plans. Flattered by his interest, Blanche said she would get them. She remembered that Raymond had put them away a few days ago, saying that he was putting them with all the papers. Blanche guessed that he had put them somewhere in his big desk and she was right in this surmise. They were enclosed in a huge envelope with a host of other papers, some of which fell out when she drew out the plans. Stooping to pick up the scattered papers, she looked hastily at the first one and her face flushed as she read. It was an almost rude demand that a certain bill for material be paid immediately. Picking up another one, she was shocked to see that it was almost of the same type. The third paper was in Raymond's writing, and though Blanche knew little of business she could see that he had been trying to figure out ways and means to make his income do the impossible. Then understanding dawned upon her, and with it an added rush of love for the man who had been willing to do so much for her. "Poor, dear Raymond," she whispered, "how selfish and blind I have been."

Mr. Gray was charmed with the plans and again asked if there was any chance that they might change their mind. This time Blanche said she would think it over and asked them to call that evening and talk with her husband. Before their coming, however, Blanche herself talked it over with Raymond and told him that she was not so keen about the house after all—that it would entail too much work and too much worry—and that instead they would fix up their own cozy little place a bit and buy some of the things they both wanted.

Raymond entered into the New Year minus the load of worry he had been carrying and Blanche and he were very happy in their old home, and, woman-like, she was proud of the neat profit they had made in selling the new house over which she had taken such pains.

The Christmas Proposal

by Katherine Edelman

LAURA WORTHLEY had passed her thirtieth birthday some years since, and although she was possessed of more than ordinary good looks, coupled with a good disposition and an inherent ability for home making, she had never had a proposal of marriage. Once, some one had almost spoken the words—Laura often thought of that wonderful evening since—but just as it seemed that the fateful moment had arrived Aunt Mabel had come seeking her for something or another. Next day Robert Barrett had left Lindenfield and Laura had never heard from him since.

The passing of time had eased the pain in her heart and she had managed to go about and show a smiling face to the world, but often she felt very, very lonely. But she told herself that she had no right to think of Robert; he was probably married and settled down long before now in that far-off land where his company had sent him.

But, always as Christmas approached she found herself thinking of him and picturing the home that might have been theirs together. Aunt Mabel had been dead two years now, and since her death Laura had felt very much alone in the world, in spite of many friends.

But every year at Christmas time her cousin Vera, a widow of limited means, came to spend the holidays with her, and always at this time she gave a party for the young people. And lest any of them might be thwarted of love and a proposal, as she had been, she saw to it that plenty of mistletoe was in evidence.

She looked very beautiful now as she welcomed her guests to her annual party. She was one whom years give new and added charm in recompense for the rosy flush of youth that they steal, and as she walked to the door to answer a new peal of the bell, she would have attracted attention anywhere.

Opening the heavy door she looked without. A little cry sprang to her lips, for there she saw Robert Barrett. A rush of joy, of wonder, of delight, flooded her whole being. He had come—he still loved her—else, why would he be here?

Steadying herself by the doorway she bade him welcome, and as she recovered from the sudden rush of joy at seeing him again, her voice grew cool and composed as she assured herself that his coming meant nothing more than a friendly visit—that even should he be still unwed, it would be some one younger, fairer than she that he would now seek.

He seemed rather ill at ease, and he blundered and stammered so when he spoke, that his voice was almost drowned in the sounds of gay laughter and music that came from beyond. Then, suddenly, without warning, his arms reached out and he clasped Laura close and she felt his kisses upon her lips. He was asking the question that she wanted most to hear, and he was telling her that she meant all the world to him. When they both came back to earth he showed her the spray of mistletoe above them: "It gave me the courage I lacked long ago," he whispered.

Later he told her why he had never written. Aunt Mabel had spoken to him the evening before he left, and had told him that it would not be fair to tie Laura with a promise; also she had hinted of another man who was more favored. The company had just brought him back to Lindenfield, and as soon as he got in, learning that Laura was still free, he had come.

And because it was Christmas time, and also because the years that were coming held a wonderful promise for them, and they could afford to be generous, there was no resentment in their hearts for the thing Aunt Mabel had tried to do.

A TIMELY TIP

A year's subscription to The Klemme Times is a gift that will last throughout the year 1928. It is a most acceptable gif that will be appreciated by every member of he family for fify-two weeks. The paper is for you, about you and your relatives and friends, and every issue is full of live and interesting news. Every year a good many people solve the annual Christmas problem by sending The Times to some relative or friend for a year. The old home paper makes a splendid Christmas remembrance.

When HE Comes

Christmas Killarneys

by Frances Grinstead

JOSEPH REAGAN had just opened his little florist shop on a morning a few days before Christmas. In his single window were baskets of poinsettia, pots in which Christmas cherries grew, fragrant narcissus that reminded you spring would be here some day, and in the center of the display was a great basket of pink roses.

Joseph's daughter, Katie, helping in the shop during the vacation from high school, flitted about in short-skirted flannel arranging growing plants, baskets and glowing red and green decorations just for the pleasure of it, for the shop was already as trim and fresh as any customer could wish.

Joseph, his eyes bright with the light of the Christmas spirit that comes to us at this time, stood contentedly, palms flat on a counter, and looked out at the street.

He saw a boy who might have been sixteen or seventeen, though small for those years. His suit proclaimed its own threadbareness, as well as the boy's thinness, by the way it clung to him. He tried to pull his ragged cap down over ears that were flaming with cold, and Joseph thought he shrank from putting the worn soles of his shoes against the freezing-cold pavement. But as the boy came opposite the florist's window he sheered inward on the sidewalk to look at the display of those wares that only people who have satisfied their needs in food and clothes can afford to buy.

Joseph noted with pity the pinched features, the look of grim control in the face of one so young. It was the great basket of pink roses that held his attention. Joseph expected to see him turn away with the look of resignation many more prosperous seeming people have when they must pass the temptation of flowers. To his surprise the lad, seeming to settle the worn coat a little more closely on his shoulders, entered the shop briskly. Just inside the door he shivered with delight in the warmth. Joseph saw he had sandy hair and eyes of Irish blue.

"It's freezing he is, the poor boy," Joseph murmured to Katie, "and sure the shop looked friendly.

"And would you like to look at the flowers, young sir?" he bowed to the unpromising customer. "You're welcome to enjoy them all. But maybe you'd like first to warm yourself beside the radiator, it being a frosty morning."

"Thank you, I will," the boy stretched numb fingers over the steamy heat after he had taken off his cap in deference to Katie, who watched him sympathetically while she pretended to retie the satin ribbon around a pot of poinsettia. "But I want to buy some roses. Like those in the window."

"Ah, the Killarneys," smiled Joseph. "They are bonny flowers, the Killarneys."

He stepped lightly to the refrigerator at the back of the shop and, taking out a bouquet of the roses, brought them forward for the young man's inspection.

The lad thrust a hand into his pocket. Joseph and Katie saw him put back a nickel and two pennies. The rest he spilled onto the counter, because his hand trembled with cold.

"There's only a dollar and a half," he said. "How many will that buy?"

The florist shook his head. "Not so many of these, son. But let me show you. We have some here we call 'seconds.'" He retraced his steps and drew forth another bouquet.

"Oh, those are finer yet!" cried the boy.

"They look so," said Joseph fairly, "but they will not last quite so long. They bloomed too soon, for there were not enough people wanting roses yesterday, when they should have been sold."

"I will take those," said the boy of the sandy hair, the glow in his blue eyes seeming to warm his whole body, "but they are to go to a little town east of here. Could you mail them for me to Mrs. R. E. Arnolfi, at Laddonia?"

Joseph, scribbling slowly on the pad he drew toward him, could only think of the miserable nickel and two pennies he had seen the boy put back in his pocket.

And he thought, "Sure, now, why wouldn't he be sending them to some bonny lass like my Katie instead of a 'Mrs.' This is only some woman who has charmed the lad for pastime, or more like it's some fine lady, his teacher perhaps, would dislike to know he's spent his last money for these."

He overcame a natural hesitation—It was none of his business how the young boys spend their money—and leaned across the counter toward the boy.

"Sure, an' wouldn't it be better now if you took the money across the street there and got yourself a good breakfast at my friend Timmy O'Mara's? Are you sure you want to send the lady these flowers, and you with only seven sents left to you?"

"Oh, yes," insisted the boy, who with thawing out by the radiator had lost much of his shrunken appearance, "you see, they're for my mother."

"Your mother!" exclaimed Joseph, consulting the memorandum he had made, "Mrs. Arnolfi. Son, I made sure your name would be Irish."

"And the first of it is. It's Terrence," beamed the sandy-haired lad, "and my mother is Irish. Sure, Killarney means all the romance of t' world to her. And how she loves t' roses! She says they seem to h like they had souls or the little p ple was in them. I must send her t' roses for Christmas so she will t'i do you see, that I am doing well, I haven't enough money to take me the way home, like I wanted to go."

"Sure, Terry, you're talking t' blarney now yourself," the floris smiled through misty eyes. At the kindness in that voice the boy's head suddenly went down on the counter and he was sobbing with heartbreak.

"Katie, if he's more than fifteen after all!" was Joseph's whispered exclamation before he rounded t counter, to put an arm across the b s shoulders.

"There now, Terry. Tell me all about it, lad," he urged, and Terry did, snuffling after the deluge tears.

"So you ran away because the mo er wanted you to stay in school. you're homesick for the little c with the flowerpots inside and in summer the rosebu aud blooming. Well, I think we can fix that up. I'll take you over to Timmy O'Mara's restaurant right now. Then we'll see about getting you a ticket home."

The blue eyes of Terrence were bright and he choked on his thanks, "But how'd I pay you again for that' Mother doesn't make much at the sc ing and who at home would hire a b that had run off and left his mother?

"I don't know who at home would, but I would. For afternoons when school hours are over. It's hard to find boys who love the flowers, isn't it, Katie?"

Katie, suddenly appealed to for conversation, uttered a breathless "yes," but there was an expansive smile of approval with it.

"Your mother might as well sew 'n the city," the florist went on. ' l there's a fine high school wh have classes to teach you ab ing flowers."

As Joseph Reagan took h a peg and opened the door, ded dumbly and the glow in l though it may have been produce anticipation of breakfast, was not lessened by the thought of school.

"Shall I mail these roses to Mrs. Arnolfi, father?" asked Katie.

"No! No! What are you thinking of! Those 'seconds' will be a day ol when they reach her. Send t finest Killarneys we have. Didn't hear him say his mother is an l lady? And besides, Terrence is p tically a member of the firm now."

There is scarcely a neighborhood anywhere not disturbed by some one practicing on a musical instrument, but we have almost no musicians, and no music.

Our methods of learning are shiftless. In my neighborhood a boy is trying to learn to play the saxophone. His practicing consists of playing "Old Black Joe" twenty minutes a day and his mother is compelled to drive him to that.

Every day he tries "Star Spangled Banner," but in six months has been unable to "get it."

His mother, his teacher, do not know the boy is not learning music.

When it comes to money, the meanest men seem to have the same habits as capitalists and middle class people. When a pirate becomes powerful, he does not divide equally with his associates; it was Captain Kidd's money that was hidden. Captain Kidd had the fame connected with his forays; no one recalls any of the lesser rogues who pillaged with him. Bad men seem to be as stingy as the good.

I lately picked up a book containing the history of a certain philosopher. Where did he get this or that notion, doctrine, or belief? In following the investigation, the writer of the book examined philosophy as far back as history goes, with the final conclusion that the famous man originated nothing at all; he, indeed, confessed hatred of a certain predecessor because he had written everything worth writing. And the philosopher who had written everything worth writing probably gained his wisdom from old men and books.

If a man is out of a job, it has always been his business to get one. God Almighty made the rule, and weak men cannot change it. The good Lord also says that if a man can't get four dollars a day, he should work for three until he is able to demonstrate that he is worth four, five, ten or fifty. We hear much of the economic question in England. The trouble there is men refuse to accept work at God's scale.

As a race becomes more practical with age, the credits and debits of love are gone over with more candor and wisdom. Some of the debits are very hard on both sides; some say worse with women than with men. Still, love sometimes slaps a man pretty hard, too.

I recently heard a young man say he never had a chance. I have known him all his life; he has never had anything else; chances have come in his way every day, and been neglected by him.

Parents in a little Western town lately held a meeting, and passed resolutions declaring children have too many amusements. "We have no control of our children," the resolutions stated. "Welfare workers are bringing them up, and we can do nothing with them." I'm glad parents are beginning to revolt; they should have done so long ago. Instead of benefiting homes, welfare workers are ruining them.

In a certain town a certain man is president of a certain club which meets weekly for luncheon, and to listen to a prominent speaker. The president conceived the notion of having the club get behind a certain benefit ball. Every member was given a certain number of tickets to sell, and no excuses accepted. The papers were full of the affair for days and weeks. "Let every man do his duty; the good name of the town it at stake"—that sort of thing. Merchants were boycotted unless they took advertising in a benefit ball program: none of the old tricks were neglected. A parade was held to boom the sale of tickets, and everyone in it felt and looked ridiculous. Finally the ball was given and the expenses were so great that the total income did not equal them.

I have been indignant for weeks because a cheap writer referred to manufacturing, commerce and agriculture as "the lower activities."

I read because I occasionally encounter a good thing. Recently I encountered a sentence which made reference to "the indestructible sanity of the self-taught." It is a good line. Another man writing of a dull day, referred to "the gaunt clock gnawing at the long afternoon." Both these authors were dull in spots.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Opening of New Congress—Kansas City Wins the G. O. P. Convention.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRIMED for lively fights on various issues, the Seventieth congress began its first session on Monday. The house immediately re-elected Nicholas Longworth, but organization of the senate and committee assignments in both houses was delayed. With the opening of the senate on Tuesday came the first gun in the battle over the seating of Frank L. Smith and W. S. Vare, senators-elect from Illinois and Pennsylvania respectively. Norris of Nebraska led off with a resolution summarily refusing the two membership in the senate. Counter resolutions by their friends, that they be allowed to take the oath of office and that the charges of corrupt election practices be referred to the committee on privileges and elections, were offered. On Wednesday Senator Borah had his say in support of the latter resolutions and the senate, by a vote of 53 to 28, decided that Smith could not take the oath. Later the same action was taken in the case of Vare. Both cases were referred to the Reed committee on campaign expenditures.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S message, read to congress Tuesday, was a straightforward, business-like document, setting forth the needs of the country as he saw them and advising as to the future. He did not withdraw a step in his attitude on controversial questions and consequently the message in its entirety was pleasing only to his thick and thin supporters. The program he recommended for the nation may be summarized thus: Farm relief—creation of a federal farm board to administer a revolving fund to aid co-operatives. Flood control—Construction of dikes, spillways and aids to navigation in the lower Mississippi. Taxaton—Moderate reduction as recommended by Secretary Mellon. Merchant marine—stop further building and turn ships over to private ownership. Inland navigation—Projection of the Gulf-to-the-Atlantic waterway through the St. Lawrence. Panama canal—Construction of $12,000,000 dam at Alhajuela for flood protection. National defense—An army large enough for protection of the nation with generous supply of officers; more cruisers, airplane carriers and submarines for the navy but no participation in a navy building race. The President also urged strict enforcement of prohibition and again asked that the Chief Executive be given authority to act during coal strikes. In the matter of foreign relations he recommended understandings with other nations toward outlawing war and negotiations of covenants not out of harmony with the Constitution.

The President's farm relief proposition did not at all suit the corn belt men; his recommendations as to taxes was at variance with the ideas of the ways and means committee, which on the same day introduced its bill calling for a tax reduction of $232,735,000, much greater than was favored by Secretary Mellon; the limitation of flood control work to the lower Mississippi was contrary to the views of a great many who advocate a much more comprehensive policy; the "big navy" men were not satisfied with his program for fighting ships, and both parties are split on his merchant marine policy.

WEDNESDAY President Coolidge submitted his annual budget message, and again warned congress that taxes should not be reduced by more than $225,000,000. The budget he offered for the fiscal year 1929 calls for total expenditures, exclusive of those of the postal service, amounting to $3,556,957,031. This is about $64,000,000 less than the estimated expenditures of the current fiscal year of 1928, but represents an increase of about $63,000,000 over actual disbursements of the fiscal year 1927.

On the basis of estimated receipts, for the fiscal year 1929 of $3,809,497,314, President Coolidge predicts a surplus of $252,540,283, assuming no change in the present revenue laws.

He estimates the surplus for the current fiscal year at $454,283,806, this figure representing the difference between estimated receipts of $4,075,598,091 and expenditures amounting to $3,621,314,285.

The President allows approximately $645,000,000 for the purely defense needs of the nation during the year ending June 30, 1929, an increase of approximately $20,000,000 over the sum made available for defense last year. According to the President's figures, navy estimates for the next fiscal year are $362,167,020, an increase of $14,299,043 over this year. For the army the budget estimates provide $291,331,833. The navy total, however, contains approximately $9,000,000 for retired pay for officers and enlisted men, an item not included in the army total.

WHEN the Republican national committee got together—with two new anti-La Follette members surprisingly elected in Wisconsin—it first called on the President in the White House, and Mr. Coolidge made quite a long address in which he quite definitely removed himself from consideration for the nomination in 1928. His words were:

"This is naturally the time to be planning for the future. The party will soon place in nomination its candidate to succeed me. To give time for mature deliberation I stated to the country on August 2 that I do not choose to run for President in 1928. My statement stands. No one should be led to suppose that I have modified it. My decision will be respected. After I had been eliminated the party began and should vigorously continue the serious task of selecting another candidate from among the numbers of distinguished men available."

The committee then took up the question of the convention city, hearing the offers of the several contestants. Chairman Butler aroused a good deal of animosity by declaring his preference for Kansas City, and a hot fight between that city and San Francisco resulted. On the twentieth ballot Kansas City won, and the committee at once issued a call for the convention to meet there on June 12. Mr. Coolidge's "elimination" of himself was followed by a statement by Charles Evans Hughes that he was not to be considered a candidate, and, though Senator Willis announced that he was willing to accept the honor, there were left but three major contenders for the nomination—Frank O. Lowden, Herbert Hoover and Vice President Dawes. The selection of Kansas City was regarded as rather favorable to Lowden and Dawes.

Under the terms of the call for the convention the basis of representation will be the same as in 1924. There will be one delegate for each congressional district and one additional delegate for each district polling 10,000 or more votes for the Republican candidate for President in 1924 or Republican candidate for congress in 1926. Then there will be four delegates at large for each state and three additional delegates for each state carried by the Republican ticket in 1924. There will be 1,089 delegates in the convention, compared with 1,109 in 1924. Kentucky and Texas gain three each, while Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Wisconsin lose three each, Tennessee eight; Georgia, North Carolina, and Virginia two each, and Alabama, Louisiana, and New York one each.

WARNING was issued to the Republican and Democratic parties by the Anti-Saloon league at its meeting in Washington, that the league membership will support only those candidates in state and national elections whose utterances, acts and records prove them to be loyal supporters of the Volstead act. To win the support of the organization the parties must nominate men whose loyalty to the dry act cannot be questioned.

After a bitter fight between the supporters of F. Scott McBride, national superintendent of the Anti-Saloon league, and Ernest H. Cherrington, general manager of the league's publishing activities, over the question of whether force or persuasion should be the major weapon used in the future by the league in its fight against repeal of the Eighteenth amendment, McBride was re-elected and Cherrington was made director of a new department of education, publicity and research. E. S. Shumaker, Indiana superintendent who is under indictment for contempt of the Indiana Supreme court, was dropped from the executive committee.

MEMBERS of the powerful American Farm Bureau federation, in convention in Chicago, listened to an address by General Pershing on the place of agriculture in a national defense program, and liked his views so well that they told him they would like to vote for him for President of the United States. He smiled, but declined to comment on this incipient boom. The federation adopted a resolution insisting that legislation which "contains the principles embodied in the McNary-Haugen bill, with such improvements as experience and good judgment may suggest shall again be passed by congress."

Another resolution asked a change in the tariff act so that the United States tariff commission may more efficiently serve agriculture in the cases before it.

SECRETARY MELLON in his annual report says that, notwithstanding a decline in business activity, underlying conditions are sound. "Business activity began in the spring months of this year to fall below the totals of last year," says the report. "As a result of this recession business is now being conducted on a basis that conforms more nearly to the normal expectancy, as judged from the regular rate of growth of the country. While business is not as active as in most of 1926, it can hardly be said to be subnormal, and the underlying fundamentals appear to be sound.

"Another indication of healthy business conditions is the recent recovery in commodity prices, due in the main to the rise in agricultural prices. The growing stability of prices in Europe, moreover, is favorable to our export commodities."

CHARLES MARTINDALE, master in chancery of Indianoplis, filed in the United States District court a report in which the Standard Oil Company of Indiana and fifty other oil concerns are held not guilty of violating the Sherman anti-trust law by a monopoly of trade. Martindale holds that there is no evidence of an existing conspiracy in restraint of trade, maintenance of a monopoly, price fixing or pooling of patent rights. Dismissal for lack of equity of the suit instituted by the government three years ago was recommended.

LITHUANIA and Poland presented their complaints against each other to the council of the League of Nations in Geneva and asked for relief. Premier Waldemaras appeared for Lithuania first before representatives of Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy and Japan, and refused to budge from his position. He said he was ready to give the council every guarantee of Lithuania's pacific intentions and his willingness to set up a neutral zone between Lithuania and Poland, but he could not go into the question of immediately restoring diplomatic relations with Poland or allowing the Poles untrammeled entry into Lithuania.

Next day Waldemaras told the council how Lithuania has been continually menaced by Poland since the establishment of the little republic, and recounted the alleged Polish actions in support of Lithuanian rebellions. Foreign Minister Zaleski of Poland said Waldemaras' charges and fears were based on gossip and that his country extended the fraternal hand of friendship to Lithuania. Finding the whole matter too difficult for immediate decision, the council referred it to Van Blockland of Holland for a report.

JAPAN'S plan to borrow $40,000,000 from J. P. Morgan & Co. for the benefit of the Japanese owners of the South Manchurian railway has been killed. All the Chinese factions had protested against it, and the disapproval of the United States was considered certain. Under the American notes of May, 1915, Japan is required to obtain American approval of any Manchurian loan to which the Chinese have not consented. The Japanese are greatly disappointed by this failure.

REVIEW: THE EARLY PROPHETS OF ISRAEL

GOLDEN TEXT—God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past to the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken by His Son.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What We Have Learned This Quarter.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Great Men and Great Teachings of the Quarter's Lesson.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Lessons from the Early Prophets.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Mission of the Prophets.

The method of review must always be determined by the genius of the teacher, the aptitude of the pupils and the particular grade in the school. For the adult classes three methods are suggested.

I. Biographical.

During the quarter six great prophets have been under review, namely, Elijah, Elisha, Amos, Hosea, Haggai and Isaiah. Assignments of these characters to representative members of the class should be made the week before so that they may come prepared to present the vital characteristics of these men.

II. Application of the Prophetic Messages to Modern Life.

Assignments should be made the preceding Sunday so that the members of the class may come prepared to make application of the vital messages of the prophets to the affairs of modern life. The following questions may be considered as representative:

What application can be made of the prophets' teachings as to: (1) The land question in the United States, (2) the problem of pauperism, (3) the problem of capital and labor, (4) light on the theological controversies of the present time, (5) a message for the modern woman, (6) the cause of prohibition, (7) modern amusements, (8) modern church life.

III. A Summary of Facts and Teachings.

Lesson for October 2.

The basis of decision as between Baal and Jehovah was that the true God should answer by fire. The leading lesson is that accepted service is the supreme test, enabling men to choose between Christ and heathen gods.

Lesson for October 9.

Elijah, who was brave before Baal's prophets, was frightened by Jezebel's threat and ran away. He failed at what had been his strong point.

Lesson for October 16.

Ahab coveted Naboth's vineyard. Jezebel schemed to destroy Naboth so that Ahab's petulant desire might be gratified. Judgment fell upon both Ahab and Jezebel.

Lesson for October 23.

A prophet is one who speaks forth God's message. When Isaiah had a vision of the Lord and was cleansed from sin, he was ready to go at the divine bidding.

Lesson for October 30.

Amos was called from the humble occupation of a shepherd and tradesman to fill the prophetic office. God is not dependent upon any school or system of training for the supply of His workers.

Lesson for November 6.

Though the nation had grievously sinned by worshiping idols, oppressing their fellow men and persecuting the prophets who spake against them, God invited them to return to Him.

Lesson for November 13.

Israel's apostasy was illustrated by Hosea's unfaithful wife. In spite of their wickedness God loved them and pled with them to return unto Him.

Lesson for November 20.

Isaiah pointed out the moral state of the people, exposing their ingratitude, stupidity, and habits of evil, and showed them that although God had severely chastised them, their case was not hopeless.

Lesson for December 4.

Isaiah reminded Israel of God's peculiar favor under the figure of a favorite vineyard. He pointed out the sins which brought their ruin. The outstanding sins were oppression of the poor, drunkenness, proud self-conceit and perversion of justice.

Lesson for December 11.

Through Isaiah's long ministry he was privileged to give counsel to several kings. Sometimes it was counsel of encouragement, sometimes of rebuke. To Ahaz he gave counsel of assurance, pointing to a day of deliverance and blessing through Immanuel. When Hezekiah faced the crisis of invasion by the Assyrians, he resorted to the house of the Lord and sent for Isaiah.

Work on Your Knees

A marble cutter, with chisel and hammer, was changing a stone into a statue. A preacher looking on said: "I wish I could deal such clanging blows on stony hearts." The workman made answer: "Maybe you could, if you worked like me, upon your knees."

a backward glance at Joan, reluctantly followed the from the house.

In the trade-room Guthrie told the story of Craig Galbraith.

"He made the trench raid a work of art, Farrel, V. C., Croix de Guerre, Legion of Honor, he had them all. There wasn't a Hun headquarters that didn't know his name. They offered a king's ransom for him dead or alive."

"They warned me at Moose that it would be suicide for us to go to that schooner," replied the older man.

"It would have been, Farrel"

"What was he doin' with the Lewis guns?"

"I don't know. Of course, I thought he was the man wanted and figured that he didn't intend to be taken. But he was weird with a pistol. He'd shoot with either hand, from any angle. And his strength—you saw him and can judge."

"Well," said Farrel with a sigh, "I'm glad it turned out as it did. If the description had tallied with him, you were in bad for concealing him from us, although I understand how you felt—in bad with your people, too."

"Yes," said Guthrie, quietly, "it took some hard thinking to decide what to do when you heard him break loose."

"What to do?" demanded Rawdon with a sneer. "What could you do?"

Guthrie's glance in the direction of the speaker brought the blood to Rawdon's face.

"Shoot you through the head, Rawdon, if I had been the only one involved—or rather, the ears, to insure getting your brain."

"You would—would you!" Purpling with rage, the policeman straightened to his feet. "You were trying to hide a crook from the officers of the law—or thought you were—"

With a crash Guthrie's chair hit the floor behind him. "Mention that man over there again—and you'll never leave—"

"Hold on here!" Roughly pushing his subordinate behind him, Farrel faced the man whose mouth curled in contempt of the patent fear in the eyes of the younger policeman. "I won't have a fight here, major! You're nervous—get yourself in hand!"

"It's all right, Farrel. He's safe enough here," said Guthrie quietly, "but he'll have to watch his step. Understand, Rawdon?"

Turning his back on the victim of his over-raw nerves, Garth threw back a good-night to Inspector Farrel and returned to the watchers.

Guthrie crossed the white clearing, stung by regret at his loss of self-control, his deliberate humiliation of the man whose manner with Joan Quarrier at the supper table was eloquent of the gossip at Albany. But, harassed as he was by anxiety for the safety of Galbraith, at the veiled insult in the uncouth Rawdon's frank admiration of the girl, who staunchly simulated interest in his attentions, while her ears strained for the dreaded sounds which would betray them, Guthrie's command of himself had been too sorely taxed. The strain over, his raw nerves had sought the panacea offered. During his short stay at Elkwan, Constable Rawdon of the government police was not apt to press his attentions on Joan Quarrier.

CHAPTER XVI

What could be done, Etienne and Old Anne, under the dictions of the nurse, had done for the dead. In the morning, protected by a cache of logs, he would be buried in the snow until the spring would admit of the digging of a grave.

"You need air and change from this place." Garth said to Joan. "The stars are out; put on your coat and let's walk. I have much to say to you."

"It would be good. I think I'd like to walk on the river ice," she agreed. And with Shot as escort, they crossed the clearing.

"How low the stars seem, almost crowding down on us, as you told me that morning on our way to Albany."

"How long ago it seems—so much has happened," he said.

"To you, Mr. Exile—and to me," she answered cryptically.

"You never told me why you stayed at Albany," he began after a silence.

She did not meet his eyes, but looked far to the east where the moon, sliced in half, like a mammoth cheese, by the roof of Akimiski, bathed the indigo barrens with silver.

"Is it a secret?" he pressed.

"I was needed there."

"And now, because of my bringing you into this, you can't go back."

"They will gladly have me back—they need me."

"But so do I, Healer of Wounds, I need you. Won't you listen—believe what I say?" His voice broke with emotion he could not control.

She stopped. They had reached the river trail and were alone—out of sight of the post buildings.

"Please, I beg of you, never call me that again!"

"Why, I'm sorry—I didn't know," he faltered, puzzled by her mood. "It means so much to me—a badge of honor, an accolade."

"Yes, at first, but it has come to mean to me—" she checked herself.

He waited, watching the light touch her sober face.

"It has come to mean to me," she went on, "something humiliating—hateful."

"Why, my dear child!" he gasped in astonishment. "Humiliating? I'm proud—so proud, to love the woman who has been a healer of wounds."

"Oh, but you don't understand—can't see! And how am I to tell you?"

"If, after what we've been through together," he said passionately, "if, knowing that you are all my world—all I have left to cling to, to fight for, you can't be frank with me—"

"You tell me that you care for me," she broke in bitterly, "then why is she there—in your room, where you can see her?— If you've forgotten—as you say."

He raised his mitten to his forehead as if dazed, then turned a face tense with candor. "Is she still—there?"

"Still there? Don't you know that the three likenesses are in your room, now?"

He smiled as one smiles at the caprice of a child. "It is so long since I'd noticed them, I had forgotten." Then, dimly at first, in a moment he saw—"Healer of Wounds!" he murmured. "Oh, you think there's a scar, a wound unhealed—the memory of her, that I can't forget?" he cried. "Ethel! You think you're healing the wounds Ethel left—a substitute. Is that it?"

She would not meet his smiling eyes.

"Long before I met you," he went on, "she had become a shadow. I had come to see her as she was—the shallowness, the hardness of her. Then there came sailing across the strait a girl with eyes that never wavered—a heart all gold, and hair," he laughed at the anti-climax, "that the wind loved to play with. Like the soldier she was, she forgot self in the work at hand. With those clear eyes, saw the truth. And when I left her that night on the shore of the Albany—I loved her."

With a Swift Movement He Caught Her.

With a catch in the throat, Joan Quarrier lifted her face to the moonlight. The sensitive mouth quivered below clouded eyes, fiercely questioning.

"You cared for me, you say, but each morning you looked at the lovely creature you had lost—and felt—just a bit sorry for her, for yourself, eh, Major Guthrie?"

He hardly recognized the voice, so hoarse, so bitter was the note on which she finished.

Hopelessly he shook his head. As if to himself, he muttered in protest: "They were there with those of the family, untouched, because unthought of. I was away—hardly slept in the room after leaving you at Albany, up the coast, inland after Souci, on the island. Do you think I would have turned to you in my need—asked you to come up here—with all it meant—if I had not loved you?" he pleaded.

But in her overmastering pride, Joan Quarrier was obdurate.

"Let us walk," she said, mechanically, and started on.

They walked a mile up the river trail, and turning, faced the pulsing aurora. The stinging air had lured the color to her cheeks, the shadows left her somber eyes. They vied in naming the colors in the intermittent glow of the northern lights, identified stars, for the moment forgot themselves in the stimulation of keen air and leaping pulses.

As they neared the post, her moccasin slipped on the ice-hard trail. With a swift movement he caught her, felt for an instant the weight of her in his arms, straightened, still holding her; then, as her hood fell back and he caught the fragrance of her hair—crushed his lips to it. Slowly her dark head turned, and there on the ice of the Elkwan, he held her, trembling, meeting his wild mood with a revelation of tenderness—of passion, unguessed.

"Why, oh, why," he asked, "did you torture me so long?"

"Because, Oh, Lord of Elkwan and half of Akimiski," she bantered, "you tortured me with those photographs."

"Do you believe—that I forgot their existence?"

"Yes—but oh, I couldn't be second best—her substitute. I wanted to be first—wanted to be everything to you—all. And yet you needed me so—I knew it that night at Albany."

"That I loved you?"

"No, stupid, that you needed me."

"And that is why you stayed at Albany—because you thought I needed you?"

"No, prince of blindmen, because I—loved you." And she tenderly kissed the cicatrix which crossed his cheek. "You made me love you the night you told me of the coming of Ninda, to Elkwan."

"And I made your brother hate me," he laughed.

"Have I atoned for his injuries to you?"

"I love him for those injuries. He didn't know how he helped. But you mustn't stand here in the cold with your hood off. You'll freeze your face!" Guthrie suddenly became serious.

"Not with you, hungry man!" she laughed.

"Good-night, oh much-needed lady," he said in the living room.

"Good-night, Sir Philip Sydney. All in a few hours I have seen your eyes cold as the ice out there—and I've seen them—well, as they look now, dearest man-with-the-scar," and she kissed him and went to her room.

The following morning, when the police dog-team had left for Seal cove, the nervous Ungavas led by the protesting Shot drew the rude coffin of Craig Galbraith to the post cemetery. There, beside the snow-drifted cross marking Ninda's grave, they built a cache of logs over the rough box of spruce slabs, and against it, rested the spruce cross which would be set in the spring when the frost left the ground.

As Garth and Etienne crossed to the trade-house, the half-breed stopped, shading his eyes with a mitten.

"See something?"

"Ah-hah!"

"Can't be the police team coming back?"

"No, eet ees long team—seex dog, I think"

"From Albany—a packet from Cameron. I wonder what's happened."

Twenty minutes later Guthrie was opening the mail bag which the dog driver from Albany had handed him.

"As soon as Etienne rounds to," wrote Gameron, "you bring Miss Joan down the coast—she's needed. The company is locating a permanent post on the island in the summer, and want you to handle it. You have made a big stroke with Moose and Montreal, and if you care to stay in the trade, ought to go far. I trust by now you are open to congratulations."

But the dispatch of the mail-team to Elkwan was due to the special orders from Montreal headquarters which accompanied a letter addressed in typewriting to Major Garth Guthrie. Curious of the reason prompting the unknown writer to the haste and expense of an express packet down the Missinaibi and up the coast in midwinter, Garth opened the letter in the handwriting of his brother, which ran:

"Dear Old Garth:

"If you will accept my deep apologies, I will be a happy man. I have learned that Quarrier had personal reasons for wishing to injure you. At the time I believed him—thought you had cut loose from us, were unfair to Ethel. But I have received a long letter from Fort Albany, from Quarrier's sister, which is corroborated by Cameron, the factor, which clears the situation. This Miss Quarrier seems to be a most unusual woman, and Clara—you know Clara—well, she has a surmise.

"The Hudson's Bay people have told me of your marked success this winter, for which my congratulations. A Guthrie has a nose for business. Best wishes, my boy, but if you will come back to us, greater opportunities await you here. By the way, you may be interested to hear that Ethel married Sir Hubert Quayle, president of the Quayle Mines, last week. Clara is furious. She sends her best love.

"Affectionately,
"CHARLES."

Hurrying to his quarters with Shot at his heels, Garth thrust the letter into Joan's hand. He watched her color deepen as her dark eyes lit with her joy for him.

"Oh, I'm so glad—so glad!" she cried. "They want you back, Garth, want you with them."

"Shall I take Ethel down now? They ought not to be in there—her photographs—a married woman," he teased.

She shrugged her shoulders. "They are decorative, and your walls are bare. Why not leave them there?"

"Bravo, Healer of Wounds! Spoken like a soldier," and he took her in his arms, as the letter fluttered, neglected, to the floor.

"Cameron writes they are sending me next year to take the new post on the island. Is it Montreal in the spring—or our honeymoon on Akimiski?"

She rose and went to his open arms. "The island—The Land across the Water—in sight of which I met that very black sheep, Garth Guthrie—let's spend the summer there, Mr. Exile—alone."

For a space man and girl stood, lost in their happiness, then a wistful whine, the protest of two hairy paws, in silent demurrer to his heartless exclusion, waked them.

On his hind feet, nose to her shoulder, she impulsively drew the dog to her. "What would this family be without our Shotty?" And Garth's long arms circled girl and airedale, the two living things he held most dear.

[THE END.]

One thing you like about a polite man—you are not in fear of him.

Pretty Things that are Made at Home

BOUDOIR dolls have taken a new lease on life. They are more popular than ever. If you doubt it, make a tour of various gift and fancy-work departments, where Christmas displays are holding forth in a blaze of glory. A census taken will reveal dolls of every nationality and of every fanciful origin present in bewildering numbers.

A great deal of ingenuity and human interest is involved in the dressing of these dolls. For instance, if yourself and your "chum" have been showering hero worship on some favorite actress, you will make a hit with your friend if you surprise her with a character doll in likeness of your mutually idolized stage star.

Not only are actress dolls in vogue, but dolls of various nationality, especially Spanish or Dutch or any type whose dress is picturesque. The doll at the top of this picture is expensively dressed in silk and lace and true Spanish colorings. If one has not the time or inclination to costume so elaborately a dressed doll at home, the shops are full of beautifully clad "ladies" of bisque or of papier mache.

It's great fun to copy styles from an ancient Godey's Ladies' Book, in dressing boudoir dolls at home. There's the cunning type in the lower right corner; for its costume one can use bits of silk and lace and ribbons in such cunning ways. The ludicrous doll to the left has been a favorite for some time and is even yet a "reigning belle" in a boudoir where fads are encouraged by milady.

The latest "stunt," however, is to ensconce the doll of one's childhood amid silken cushions in a very conspicuous place in one's boudoir. Do not make the mistake of refrocking "dolly" in silks and satins in keeping with her modern environment. Never! The idea is to bring forth "Blue-eyes" or "Rosy" or "Dinah" as the case may be clad just as she was in the days of yore when she was your constant playmate.

BLACK LACE DECLARED ULTRA-CHIC FOR THE AFTERNOON COSTUME

IT SEEMS that there is a tremendous interest in lace this season. Why shouldn't there be! Did not our style creators declare an era of the ultra-feminine in dress? Which of course, just naturally must mean a generous use of lace. Everyone will agree, that when it comes to accenting the charm and allurement of the fair sex, there is nothing in the mode which so flatteringly "turns the trick" as dainty lace.

Even the ravishing velvet, also satin frocks which are crowding the midwinter style picture, have yielded to the lure of lace. Only a touch, perhaps, at throat or wrist or in form of graceful jabot, yet that which is exquisitely feminine, is bespoken in that bit of fine lace. It is a fact, this flair for lace is one of the season's outstanding enthusiasms.

That all fashionable Paris has become lace-inspired, there is no doubt. In what a masterly way is the haute couture of the French capital introducing laces into their program! The alliance of two such lovely items as lace and chiffon, is making its appeal in a Paris party frock. The skirt is tres bouffant in that it is composed of two deep flounces of the chiffon, so manipulated as to achieve a hemline decidedly short in front and just as decidedly long at the back. This dainty fluttering skirt is topped with a sleeveless blouse of cream Alencon lace. The hips are swathed in a gypsy girdle of softest satin matched to the orchid hue of the chiffon.

Since all black is the ultra-smart note with the Parisienne, it has brought about a vogue for filmy lacy black costumes for both evening and afternoon wear. The attractive dinner gown in the picture poses exquisitely fine black lace over supple crepe satin, which is also black. On the theory that two laces are better than one insets of hand-worked ecru lace are embroidered in the design.

A black velvet hat after Reboux' Dutch bonnet, is smartly worn with this lace frock, for velvet millinery is a very chic item this season.

Gold metal and silver lace are especially emphasized in dressy apparel for the present social season. For afternoon bridge and dining-out occasions, the extreme of elegance is attained in the two-piece frock which has a skirt of plaited gold lace topped with a sleeveless blouse of gold metal cloth.

Superb costumes of velvet with insets of metal or deep ecru lace are presented in many beautiful phases. Tinted laces, too, are playing a charming part. The satin or velvet dress with a deep yoke of tea colored or pink tinted lace is one of the outstanding successes this season.

One of the charming innovations this season is lace starred with rhinestones. Sometimes deep lace berthas are all a-glitter with tiny rhinestones or perhaps silver spangles. These scintillating colors are most charming worn with sleeveless black velvet frocks.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

Both Churches will have Christmas programs on Saturday evening. The program in Liberty Church begins at 7:15 and the one in Klemme at the usual hour. The latter will be held in the school house

On Sunday morning our services are regular. A Christmas message will be given by the pastor.

Old and young are urged to bring heir Birthday Gifts on this our Savour's Birthday.

The amount thus realized, will be applied to bring joy and happiness to children of the world who are not now recipients of this joy.

Our Morningside canvass is concluded. Several who have not been seen may still hand in their pledges

The response was, if not entirely, yet very unanimous so that Klemme and Liberty has second or third place in the Algona District.

The pastor appreciates the fine spirit of loyalty and co-operation which he had in this campaign and we most heartily thank everyone thus responding.

NEWS OF OUR SCHOOLS

Our boys came thru the fray with Crystal Lake on Tuesday eve in good shape, winning the game 18 to 13 altho they did not play the brand of ball they played against Belmond who defeated them last Friday night 21 to 18.

Our community has responded well in the sale of Christmas seals again this year We understand $23 - 80 worth has been sold by our 5th and 6th grades Half or nearly half of the gross receipts will be returned to us while the rest is used to defray expenses and aid in the campaign against Tuberculosis. Acknowledgment has been received of the $10 sent toward Near East Relief

Our school gave a Christmas program Wednesday afternoon to which many came. Christmas trees were provided by each grade room teacher and tastily decorated while a grab bag was the order in high school As far as we know each instructor expects to spend Christmas at his or her own home. A number of Christmas greetings have already been received from friends and pupils which we take this opportunity to acknowledge with gratitude. At such a time we regret any undue harshness we have at any previous time been guilty of. We wish folks would blame it all on worn and tired bodies and nerves and give us credit for good intentions. We like Klemme and its people, both in and out of school, for our life here has been made richer by the many expressions of good will toward us.

We wish all, both pupils and their parents and others a very happy holiday season.

MORE CREAMERIES VIOLATE B. F. LAW

BUTTERMAKER AT THOMPSON FINED BY INSPECTORS

Mason City Concern Also Comes Up Before Court; Ventura Warned

The Iowa state department of agriculture appears to be very active in apprehending buttermakers who are inclined to over-step the laws of propriety in the manuafcture of butter.

Tuesday of this week, Walter Thompson, buttermaker of the Thompson creamery, was brought into justice court upon complaint of Messrs Boehnke and Fiete, state dairy inspectors, to answer to a charge of manufacturing illegal butter. The specific charge against Mr. Thompson was that he was manufacturing butter that contained less than 80 per cent fat.

The information was filed in he court of Justice Howard of Forest City. Thompson asked for a change of venue to the court of Justice Field of the same town and it was in Mr. Field's court that the hearing was held.

Thompson was found guilty as charged and fined $100 and costs.

Joe O'Hara, assistant buttermaker of the local creamery, was drafted by the inspectors to appear at the hearing to give expert testimony as to the composition of butter.

The records as compiled by the state inspectors indicate that Thompson had an average over-run of approximately 28 per cent for a period of ten months—from January 1, 1927, to October 31, 1927.

The same two inspectors in checking the affairs of the Farm Products Company of Mason City, found that that institution had been manufacturing illegal butter also. In the case of this concern the butter manufactured contained less than 80 per cent fat, while the statutte provides that 80 per cent fat shall be the minimum.

Glenn A. Swartz, manager of the Mason City concern, plead guilty as charged by the inspectors in Justice Coughlin's court at Mason City, and was fined $50 and costs.

In checking the records of the Ventura creamery, Messrs. Boehnke and Flete found that that institution had had a slighly excessive overrun for the past ten months, but upon promise of immediate compliance with the law governing overrun, the matter will be dropped at this time.—Garner Leader.

Similar To Klemmo Situation

The above article from the Leader telling of the fines imposed by the inspectors is similar to the situation here when A. D. Gimer of the local creamery was taken before the court and fined for having an excessive over-run, due to a high moisure content in the butter manufactured Creameries all over the state are being warned along the lines of following the law to the letter in the manufacture of butter.

Inquiring into the matter at the Klemme Creamery we find that the matter has been adjusted here and that everything is now running along smoohly. The last sample of butter sent to the state for laboratory analysis is as follows:

Date 11-25	Butter No.12885
Moisture	15.70
Salt	2.52
Casein	1.02
Fat	80.76

The above sample shows that the creamery is turning out a product that is as near to resuirements as is possibe to produce. Tests are being made for eacn churning to check up on the proper analysis.

It is up to the butter maker to turn out a product as close to the 80 per cent fat mark as possible. To turn out a high fat content would mean a loss to the creamery and the buttermaker would be called incompetent, as the over-run would be too low; and on the other hand if he turned out butter less than 80 per cent fat, the law would grab him, or the butter might be seized by officials and a government tax imposed These creamery men over the state who have been fined should not be criticized too severely, as the conditions are being adjusted rapidly to meet the requirements laid out by the state.

James Sorenson, one of the best known dairy men in America has the following to say regarding the above situation in a recent article:

"With a Federal law which equires 80 per cent of fat in butter, it should no longer be necessary to present figures to prove what overrun can be legally obtained. If butter contains exactly 80 per cent of fat, the creamery manufacturing it can obtain a 25 per cent over-run, provided that there are no mechanical losses in the operation of the plant. It is a fact, however, that the fellow has not been born who can incorporate exactly 80 per cent of fat in butter, nor is it possible to operate a creamery without having mechanical losses, hence the overrun must necessarily be below 25 per cent, unless there is a gain of fat in the weighing and testing of the cream.

"It is probably true even in the best regulated cerameries that there is a slight gain of fat in weighing and testing, due to some of the fractions not being credited to the patrons, but the gain of fat from this source will be very nominal, indeed, if an honest effort is made to give every patron what justly belongs to him"

EPWORTH LEAGUE

Monday night a party was given at the Parish House for those in the League and those who had part in the cantata Several guests were also present, Vernon Turgasen, Fred Arnold, Harl Gimer Donald Gibbs, Miss Ruth Bailey, Andrew Wellemeyer and Miss Leona Lau.

The officers of the League are: Mildred Johnson, president; Harvey Nelson, 1st Vice Pres.; Clarence Lemke, 2nd V. P; Clarice Wellemeyer, 3rd V. P.; Gertrude Johnson, 4th V P.; Wm. Gauger, Sec.; and Carlyle Gauger, Treas.

We invite all of the young people of Klemme and vicinity to attend our meetings on Sunday evening at 7:00 o'clock at the M. E. church.

We try to make the meetings interesting and those who attend should get some good from them.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

As the old year draws to a close, the pastor wants to express his appreciation to all who showed an interest in our church and in the advancement of the Kingdom of God.

Achievement is made possible by this fine spirit of cooperation. As we enter upon the New Year we wish for all the best of everything

Next Sunday is New Years Day We will observe the day in a very special way. There is no more fitting way to begin the year than to enter into His Courts and to render unto Him from whom all blessings flow, our sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving.

Tons Of Money

The Federal reserve bank of New York handles an average of 35 tons of coins a day. Machines are used to count and weigh the coins. It is found that $1,000 worth of dimes weigh 53 pounds. Fifty bags of nickels equal $10,000, and a ton of pennies fills 60 bags and is worth $3,000. The weight is impressive, not forbidding. None will be deterred from accepting a ton of pennies a day when 5-ton trucks are numerous, and there are not too energetic citizens of Klemme who would manage to stagger to the bank with 53 pounds of dimes if given the opportunity.

The Passing of Time

"GET 'WAY!" grumbled John Martin, and pulled the bedclothes closer around him.

Partly visible in the curtained room, the littered dressing table, tumbled bed and carelessly discarded clothing bespoke a late and hurried retirement. Beside the bed, in the deepest shadow, stood his wife, half-clothed. She shook him gently.

"Come, dear, wake up," she urged. "It's nearly noon, and you promised to take us out to see Father today. See, it's broad daylight," and she drew back the curtains. The hard glare of a midwinter morning focused on the waking man. "There! That's better."

"Darn shame," her husband complained, as he rose. "Up all night celebrating, and then can't even sleep on New Year's morning."

Evelyn Martin smiled, but it was several minutes before she spoke again. "You don't really mind going out to Father's today, do you, dear? I wouldn't insist, but we didn't get out Christmas, and I mustn't let the season go by without seeing him at all. I have the presents all ready, and we can drive out in no time."

"That's all right. Always did like the old gentleman. Lot of useless trouble, though. No reason on earth why he shouldn't live here with us."

"I know, but he is so used to the old home. He says he is more lonely here with us, and I think I can understand. I'm home so little, anyhow, and there he knows every nook and cranny, and that housekeeper is just a jewel. I'm going out there more often, too, this year. I'll make that New Year's resolution, John. Now that the children are older—and, by the way, I'm dropping the Woman's club this year—I'll have more time to spare." She surveyed herself in the mirror approvingly. "Well, I'll go down. Hurry, so we can start early."

In what had once been the well-to-do section of a neighboring town stood the "old home" of Evelyn's childhood. Changes had been inside the rambling house, too, but they consisted of the modern comforts and conveniences with which a wealthy daughter chose to honor her father.

Only the parlor remained unchanged, with the old portraits on the walls, the roses painted on the ceiling, and in one corner the music box that that had once been (and still was) its chief pride. Its sole window, which overlooked the neglected yard, was enclosed by reddish-brown portieres.

A grate fire added to the dim light and spread a red glow over the two figures just entering the door. The one, a feeble, gray-bearded man, was leaning on the strong arm of a kindly-looking and interesting young woman.

"See, sir," she remarked. "I've built you a nice, warm fire that will burn all afternoon. Now wait while I fix your chair for you."

"Thank you, Marie," the old man answered, leaning heavily on his cane for a moment. Then, as he settled into his chair before the grate: "Now go and have a pleasant New Year's Day with your people. Everything will be all right."

"It's not that I want to leave you, sir—"

"Marie, I have told you to go. Have friends while you are young and can enjoy them. We grow old quickly enough."

"You are sure you will not be lonely?"

"I shall not be lonely. I am used to loneliness."

"Really, sir, I had rather stay. I shan't enjoy myself for thinking of you here alone."

"Nonsense, Marie! Here I have this nice, warm fire. I do not mind. Perhaps my daughter and her family will come to see me. They said Christmas that they would try to get down on New Year's."

"Perhaps they will, sir. I shouldn't be surprised." She carefully adjusted a lap robe about him. "Good-by, then, sir. And a happy New Year."

"A happy New Year, Marie." The door closed behind her, and the master of the house was left alone.

For a long time he sat brooding, his mind repeating over and over the final words. "Perhaps my daughter will come—I shouldn't be surprised—a happy New Year, Marie—a happy New Year—" The fire crackled, and a spark shot out on the hearthstone, but the old man still sat engrossed in his thoughts. Memories of his youth—adventures—romance — pressed upon him. Finally his mind went back to his daughter. There was her picture on the mantel. He knew it was there, even though his failing eyes could barely discern its shape. Perhaps if he could touch it he would not be so lonely. She looked so like her mother.

Holding tightly to the chair, and resting his weight on his cane, the old man rose, balanced himself, and took a few steps forward. Now he could reach the picture. He stretched out his arms, a little higher. His fingers touched the frame, but in that moment he lost his balance. To his dizzy senses it seemed the room wheeled around; he clutched at objects that always eluded his grasp. He half turned toward his chair, and in so doing he fell. "Evelyn," he called, the pitiful cry of helplessness. "Evelyn!"

The fire sputtered, and cast an unfelt warmth upon the prostrate man. Beneath his head the crumpled lap-robe absorbed the thin trickle of blood. In his hand was clasped a picture of the woman who looked like her mother. But the man himself had entered upon the happiest New Year of all.

A car drew up at the curb outside and Evelyn Martin, her arms filled with presents, tripped daintily along the walk. She stepped upon the porch and shifted her bundles to open the door.

"Yoo-hoo, Daddy! Happy New Year!" She entered the firelit room.

Obituary George Musfelt

George John Musfelt died at his home in Clarion, Tuesday evening, December 13, at the age of 29 years, 8 months and 5 days. Death was caused from diphtheria. However, he had been in failing health for the past several years.

George John was born April 7, 1898, near Littleport, Iowa. At the age of 11 months he moved with is parents to a farm near Klemme. He spent his boyhood days in Klemme and received his education from the public schools. After completing school he worked with his father at the painting trade for several years, moving to Clarion in February, 1920, working in the Musfelt cigar store, owned by his brother, for five years. The remaining years were spent trucking.

On September 1, 1920, he was married to Miss Millicent Bauma, of Clarion. They immediately went to housekeeping in this city. Three daughters were born to this union: Geraldine Evelyn, Doris Maxine and Marjorie Janice, all at home.

Mr. Musfelt at an early age attended the English Methodist church and Sunday school. George, as he was familiarly called, was widely known both in Klemme and Clarion community and was held in highest respect by all who knew him. He was of a loving and cheerful disposition, ever ready to lend a helping hand or speak a kind word to others. He was considerate and affectionate and his death brings the deepest of sorrow to his family and friends.

He leaves to mourn his death his loving wife and three daughters, also his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Musfelt of Klemme, one brother Oscar of Clarion, and two sisters, Mrs Hattie Lanahan of Klemme and Mrs. Oscar Rice of Clarion, also a host of other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held at 10 o'clock Thursday at Evergreen cemetery conducted by Rev. Fred W. Ortmeyer.

Card Of Thanks

We desire to tender our sincere thanks for the many expressions of sympathy shown in our hour of bereavement. Mrs. Geo. Musfelt, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Musfelt, Mr. nd Mrs. Oscar Musfelt, Mrs. Lanahan, Mr and Mrs. O. G. Rice.

Mr. and Mrs. John Josten entertained Christmas day, Fred Becker and family, Valentine and Eric Josten, Earl Josten and Henry Joston and family.

135 Weeks in 1928!

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Drawing by Ray Walters.

REAL that title and you will exclaim: "135 weeks in 1928? Impossible! Why, there are only 52 weeks in any year!" It isn't impossible at all. In fact, there may be even more "weeks" than that during the new year. For it was only recently that a nationally-known trade magazine printed an article under the head of "EVERY YEAR NOW HAS 135 WEEKS, THANKS TO ADVERTISING MEN—Like Eliza Crossing the Ice, American Public Leaps From Bread and Milk Week to Prune Week, Across Linoleum Week and Into Prayer Week."

The article dealt with the investigations made by Guy E. Marion, manager of the research department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, in regard to the number of "weeks" that advertisers in our newspapers and magazines have succeeded in having set aside for special observance to "capture the interest of the public." In making up the list of these weeks, he was assisted by John Cotton Dana of the New Jersey Public library, the United States Chamber of Commerce, the bureau of business standards of the Show Publications, the Chicago Daily News and the New York Times. When he had finished his labors he discovered that the 52 weeks in the year had been stretched in 135 "weeks"!

If you doubt that there may be other "weeks" added to the list that Mr. Marion has compiled, talk to the governor of any one of our 48 states and learn from him how often he is beseeched by some "day namer" or "week designator" for him to indorse this, that or the other "day" or "week." It may be that his approval for "Eat More Pecans Week" or "Stop Begging Rides Week" or "Wash Your Windows Week" is sought. Or, if the applicant thinks that he can have his cause sufficiently advertised without devoting a whole week to it, he asks merely for indorsement of an "Apricot Day" or "Play With the Children More Day," or "Stepmother's Day."

One eastern governor receives thousands of such letters during the course of the year. They say something like this: "Dear Governor: We are going to celebrate the anniversary of the founding of the Anti-Hog Thief association here next month and because it is such an important occasion in the history of our state, we would appreciate it very much if you would write a letter giving your approval of the state-wide observance of Anti-Hog Thief Day," etc. Or it may be put up to him in some such fashion as this: "Your Excellency: We believe that the people of this country and our state in particular should be made conscious of the value of brushing their overcoats and shining their shoes every morning before going to work, and we would be very grateful to you if you would indorse this movement in your characteristic style, thus helping us establish the precedent of an annual observance of Take Greater Pains With Your Personal Appearance Week," etc. Exaggerations? Perhaps, but these are no more ridiculous than some of the requests which governors and other persons in authority receive for approval of this, that or the other movement.

This does not mean, of course, that all of the special observances of "days" and "weeks" are in the same category and that many of them are not held in worthy causes. But the fact remains that our calendar is becoming much cluttered up with so many "days" and "weeks" that if the average American took time to "observe" all of them he would have time for little else. Here is the list that Mr. Marion compiled which shows why there will be 135 weeks in 1928, and if some of the "day namers" and "week designators" have their way about it that number may be greatly augmented by the time New Year's day, 1929, rolls around. Listed chronologically, the "weeks" follow:

January—National Thrift week.

February—Boy Scouts' week; National Drama week; Truth week.

March—None.

April—American Forest week; Better American Speech week; Better Homes week; National Boys' week; Health Promotion week; Reindeer week; National Negro Health week; National Garden week.

May—Clean Up week; Girls' week; International Boys' week; National Music week.

June—Chamber of Commerce week.

July—None.

August—None.

September—Constitution week.

October—Girl Scout week; Management week; National Fire Prevention week; National Apple week; National Picture week; Pharmacy week.

November—Better Speech week; Book week; American Education week; Canned Foods week; Children's Book week; Father and Son week; War on T. B. at Christmas Time week.

December—None.

Here are some others with no special designation as to the month in which they are to be "observed":

Howe About—

By ED HOWE

© Bell Syndicate. WNU Service.

Probably you have observed that all the great poets have devoted their talent to fancy; I cannot recall one who devoted many lines to the commoner and more important things of life.

Shakespeare, who shines among them as the sun shines among candles, was a toady and crawled humbly before royalty. He had no appreciation of ordinary affairs, or of their prime importance. He hated the common people, although he belonged with them by birth. He exploited kings, courts, battles, intrigues, fairies, assignation and assassination.

Such justice as we have was accomplished by common men with pikes, and not pens, in their hands.

Lately we have a literature of business, and modern literary men revile it. One of them in England has just made a great fuss because other than trained literary men are permitted to write for print.

I have often thought many of the wise men of antiquity, whom we are expected to venerate, really had little sense. One of them said there is no degree in virtue: that one is either a good man or a rogue. Certainly a foolish statement. Everyone is somewhat tigerish, and his success in life depends on the per cent he attains in becoming a tame animal.

How general the craze for newspaper notoriety! Recently a duel was fought in Italy. The principals were men of note, and, on the dueling ground, actually posed for newspaper pictures! Probably the entire encounter will shortly appear in moving pictures.

* * *

A good deal of fun is made of "Main street men." I confess I like them. Thousands of them as smart and agreeable as Sinclair Lewis, their principal critic. And far more useful. All the best people come out of the trials, tribulations and experiences of Main street.

* * *

Get all you can out of life with good health, good conduct, and good work. But when a laugh isn't due, don't laugh. I knew a man once who lost an important promotion because he was too much devoted to sunshine on cloudy days. Don't be merry when other things are clearly indicated.

The women often say men specially admire the adventuress type. There is nothing in it. Occasionally an adventuress hooks a man, but the man's a fool. Ninety-seven brides out of every hundred are good women.

Laws protecting women are sometimes queer things. A widow of forty, with three children to support, was getting $10 a week as a restaurant waitress. She was reliable and capable, and was offered the position of night cashier at $20 a week. The law forced her to quit the easier and more respectable position; it was a woman reformer in the pay of the state who forced the cashier to return to the dining room, and work harder for one-half the pay.

* * *

"Any man who will marry a second wife," says a noted cynic, "does not deserve to lose his first one."

* * *

Natural women are so admirable, useful, agreeable, that many a man willing to give a million dollars for one is afraid to risk it, in these days of flappers and suffragettes.

Mussolini, the Italian ruler, is a very remarkable man, without much doubt. He was a common man of the people many years, until discovered. And he discovered himself; the politicians had nothing to do with it. . . . How many other geniuses are there in Italy? A good many, I am sure. There are thousands and thousands and thousands of geniuses among the common people who never get a chance in a big way. I greatly respect my audience, there are so many smart people in it. Every bunch of a thousand is liable to contain a Lincoln or a Franklin. Greatness is really very common; opportunity to display it in public affairs, very rare. Look at the geniuses in business! Many of these men would make great rulers.

Occasionally I engage in a reading drunk, and do nothing for days but read, read, read; books, magazines, pamphlets, newspapers. And how difficult it is to find anything worth while! And I criticize the best I am able to find! . . . As sure as you live, teachers, publishers and book agents of the various kinds, have made too much of libraries.

* * *

A man with the better job is usually a better man than the man below him. You never in your life saw a pullman conductor who ranked with the train conductor who receives twice as much pay.

* * *

If the women find skirts objectionable, why do they not wear pantaloons as men do? Why should they expose their legs to gaze and weather?

* * *

We are always hearing of the wolf at the door. When he gets in there has been a good deal of negligence in barring the door.

Simply Had to Wear a Number Ten Shoe

The kind lady noticed an old man, whose right leg was gone, standing on a street corner with a perplexed look on his face.

"My poor man," she said, "are you lost?"

"No ma'am," he replied, "I'm looking fer a feller that got his left leg shot off in the Battle of Bull Run."

"What is his name?"

"I don't know that," was the reply, "but he wears a number ten shoe."

"For heaven's sake, if you don't know who he is, how do you know he wears a number ten shoe?"

"I ain't sure he does, but it stands t' reason thet if he don't, one or t'other of us is goin' to have trouble with his bunions. Lady, I'm looking for a right-legged feller t' go partners with on a new pair of shoes."—New York World.

Lesson for January 1

JOHN THE BAPTIST AND JESUS

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:1-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—He must increase, but I must decrease.
PRIMARY TOPIC—John Tells About Jesus.
JUNIOR TOPIC—John Welcomes and Baptizes Jesus.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPICS—John Prepares the Way for Jesus
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—John Heralds the Mighty One.

In order to understand the lessons for the first six months of the year it is necessary to grasp the central purpose of the Gospel according to Mark. In the Old Testament is set forth an august portrait of Jesus Christ. He is the Branch, the King (Jer. 23:5); the Branch, the Servant (Zech. 3:8); the Branch, the Man (Zech. 6:12); the Branch of the Lord (Isa. 4:2).

The fourfold account in the New Testament called the Gospels, placed alongside of the Old Testament predictions, fits exactly. Matthew presents Him as the King; Mark, the Servant of the Lord; Luke as the Kinsman Redeemer and John as the Son of God. The theme of Mark is the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God (ch. 1:1). The word gospel means "good news." Jesus means "Savior." Christ means "Anointed." It is good news therefore because it is the good tidings that God has anointed Jesus Christ to be the Savior of the world. The key verse is Mark 10:45, "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many." The key words are, "straightway," "forthwith," "immediately."

I. Who Is Jesus Christ (1:1)?

He is none other than God's Beloved Son.

II. The Forerunner of Jesus Christ (vv. 2-8).

1. Who he was (vv. 2,3).

He was John, the Baptist, who was prophesied of more than five hundred years before (Isa. 40:3).

His mission was to prepare the way for Christ's coming. He represented himself as but a voice of one crying in the wilderness. He was therefore God's voice sounding forth the divine will and purpose. He was content to be but a voice.

2. John's message (vv. 3-8).

(1). Prepare ye the way of the Lord (v. 3).

It was customary for servants to go before distinguished personages and prepare the road over which they were to travel. In this preparation there was to be removal of stones, the leveling of the surface, etc. John's message meant therefore that the people should remove from their hearts everything which hindered the incoming of the Lord.

(2) The baptism of repentance (v. 4).

In preparation for the coming Christ the people were to repent of their sins. Those who repented were to be baptized. Baptism was to be administered to those who repented as an expression of penitence which led to forgiveness of sin.

(3) The coming of the Messiah (vv. 7, 8).

The coming one was to be much greater than himself; so great that John was unworthy to loose the latchet of His shoes. The superior dignity of Christ was not only in His person but in the work He was to perform.

3. His success (v. 5).

People from all over Judea and Jerusalem went out and were baptized. His food and dress indicated that he had withdrawn from the world as a protest against its follies and sins.

III. The Baptism of Jesus Christ (vv. 9-11).

Jesus was not baptized because He had sinned and therefore needed repentance, but because He was now about to accomplish a work which would constitute the basis of all righteousness. He was now dedicating Himself to the task of bringing in righteousness through His sacrificial death.

(1) The opened heavens. This indicated His connection with heaven.

(2) The descent of the Spirit upon Him. This gave the divine seal to His work.

(3) The voice of approval from heaven. This made clear to John the fact that Jesus was the Messiah.

IV. Jesus Christ Tempted by Satan (vv. 12,13).

This took place immediately after the heavenly recognition. This testing was to demonstrate the reality of the incarnation. Because of this demonstration believers can be assured that the Son of God has become incorporated with humanity for the purpose of its salvation.

From Beginning to End

But the land, whither ye go to possess it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven; a land which the Lord thy God careth for; the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year.—Deut. 11:11-12.

From God's Hand

Whatever comes from God's hand bears good fruit.—Fenelon.

CHOOSING COLOR OF IMPORTANCE

Appearance Changed by Using Dark Tones Above Light on Some Models.

Most persons are a little afraid of color. That is to say, any color that is at all bright and alluring. Perhaps it is just as well for the peace of mind of the general run of humanity that such is the case. Otherwise, if we ran riot with the shrieking pigments that sometimes seem to fit our mood, the world would look like a madhouse. And yet, color is one of the greatest delights of our lives, whether we know it or not.

There is no better way to judge the good taste of the average man and woman than by the colors of their automobiles. The colors of the cars when they come from the factory are the result of careful thought and experiment. But they are, of course, only a few of the possibilities. That is why you can almost always tell a car that has been refinished. The owner has not been bound by the colors of the manufacturer.

Combinations Discussed.

It is not generally appreciated that color either lives or is dead with perfect relation to the other colors that are used with it. For instance, black is somber and uninspiring. With vermilion next to it, it suddenly lives and breathes. Combine it, however, with the cold glacial feeling of the various blues and it retires within itself and ceases to delight us.

Suppose the woman who will often drive the car has red hair. There is then no question but that she has certain subconscious likings for some tones of green. We may not realize it but these tones are direct complements of red and help to accentuate its beauties. As it is logical to clothe the body in colors that enhance its various physical attractions, so it is also logical to carry the idea further and surround your home and your car with colors that bring out your own individuality.

Have Definite Idea.

So, in refinishing your car, it is better to come to the refinishers with a definite idea. Choose some colors that are mostly friendly to you. These colors are to be had, because the best of them are now formulated from the newest tones of the times and follow the Paris and New York modes in silks. They are the ones that will satisfy you because they are the ones you are used to wearing.

Cutting Glass With Shears Is Not Difficult Task

Often in working around the automobile or radio or in home repairing it is desirable to cut glass in a curve or glass that is too thin for ordinary cutting methods. In such cases it is very helpful to put both the glass and the shears under water, says the Michigan Farmer. Apparently the water absorbs the shocks and vibrations and prevents them from extending into the glass and shattering it. One job on which this will be found useful is in cutting a headlight lens down so it can be used on a smaller headlight. If possible the glass should first be scratched on the proper circle with a cutter or diamond. Be sure to practice on some waste pieces until you get the proper hang of using the shears.

Time-Payment Plan

"If there were a million people in France buying automobiles on the installment plan, that country would be far more happy and prosperous than it is," says Alfred Reeves, general manager of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. Reeves believes that installment buying is sound economy for purchases over $100, provided the purchaser pays one-third of the total cost as first payment.

St. Louis Only Big City to Show Less Fatalities

Among the larger cities of the nation, St. Louis is the only one in which the number of motor vehicular fatalities showed a decrease the first seven months of 1927, as compared with the same period of 1926, it is pointed out in a recent survey issued in New York by the National Safety council.

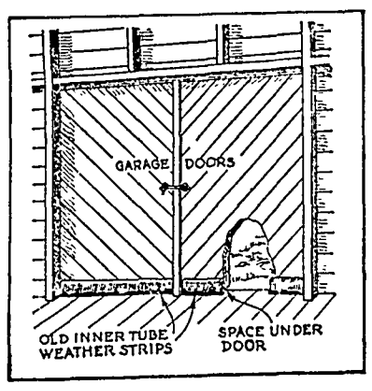
The survey states that there has been a 29 per cent decrease in St. Louis, with a fatality record of 14.8 for each 100,000 citizens, which is unusually low, as compared with other large cities.

Records of motor vehicular fatalities which are maintained by St. Louis police show that to date there have been 85 deaths this year from motor vehicular accidents, as compared with 118 for a similar period in 1926. This is at about the same ratio as the number of deaths the first seven months, the period covered by the National Safety council's survey.

The survey points out that the autumn months ordinarily are the worst of the year, in so far as the number of traffic fatalities are concerned. The number of deaths from motor accidents in the nation generally was considerably greater the first seven months of this year as compared with last year.

Weather-Stripping Will Keep Snow Out of Garage

Sections of old inner tubes tacked along the lower edge of the garage door will help keep the garage warm and prevent fine snow from being blown under the door. Be careful that the tube projects only far enough below the edge to make contact with the ground. If it hangs too far it may get caught and jam the door when it is closed. If the doors fit too loose at top and sides additional sections of inner tube can be nailed to the frame so that the doors will press against them when they are closed.



How Sections of Old Inner Tubes Weather-Strip Garage Doors.

Doors thus made air-tight will keep the car clean longer after each washing, as they exclude dust.—Popular Science Monthly.

AUTOMOBILE NOTES

We can get even more value by taking proper care of our tires. The best of them will break down quickly under ruthless wear and inattention.

"Big Gasoline Output Helps Auto Industry" says a Cincinnati headline. May we suggest timidly that the big automobile output isn't so bad for the gasoline industry, either?

Sheep Pay Best of Farm Animals

Additional Value Furnished by Wool, Secured at Little Risk.

There are no farm animals which pay better than a flock of sheep.

"To prove this, data taken from the records of a flock of sheep maintained for 12 years on the Piedmont Branch Station farm, near Statesville, may be used," says R. S. Curtis, animal husbandman at the North Carolina State college. The average weight of 30 ewes in this flock was 108 pounds at the time the lambs were weaned. The average weight of 30 lambs at the same time, that is, four months of age, was 75 pounds, or essentially two-thirds the weight of their mothers. This weight was attained under average conditions."

Lambs Worth Most.

But, states Professor Curtis, the lambs at this age were worth more than their mothers, aside from their value in creating and nurturing the offspring. A lamb at four months of age is worth more for market purposes than the mother. This would seem to be untrue, but it is true as a general rule. It is one of the conditions one finds in handling a sheep flock.

Aside from this, states Professor Curtis, it must not be forgotten that there is additional value from the sheep furnished by the wool which is secured without great risk or added responsibility.

Rapid Increase in Flock.

Then there is the third factor which is the rapid increase in the flock. Each year the average increase is 100 per cent, while a 125 per cent increase is good and a 150 per cent increase is not impossible. It is this latter increase that good sheep growers should try to get, states Mr. Curtis, and such an increase is not unlikely when the ewes have been properly bred, fed and handled.

The man who likes sheep can duplicate the results secured at the Piedmont station and may get much satisfaction and profit from handling the animals.

Chief Characteristic of Protein Is Nitrogen

The outstanding characteristic of protein is the nitrogen which it contains. Nitrogen is the substance which in the soil makes plants grow dark green and vigorously. Manure is a valuable fertilizer for the soil chiefly because of its nitrogen. Clover is valuable for the soil chiefly because of the nitrogen which it brings down from the air. All living things whether they be plants or animals must have nitrogen in the form of nitrates or ammonium salts. But animals must get their nitrogen in the form of protein. In addition to nitrogen, protein contains carbon, hydrogen and oxygen and oftentimes phosphorus and sulphur. Generally speaking, a food contains about one-sixth as much nitrogen as it does protein. For instance, tankage containing 60 per cent protein, contains about 10 per cent nitrogen. Not all proteins are alike. Some of them have their nitrogen arranged in a way which does much more good to the animal consuming it than others. A pound of protein in milk, for instance, is worth much more than a pound of protein in cottonseed meal.

Herbaceous Perennials Need Winter Protection

Herbaceous perennials need some protection during the winter. This protection is largely from the excessive moisture and only partially from the cold. In other words the plants need a parasol more than they need an overcoat.

Considering it from that standpoint, only a light mulch need be given and that only after the ground has frozen. The best way is to use a few boughs over the plants and cover this with a 2 or 3-inch layer of straw or strawy manure. All the foliage of the plant should be left on until spring. The mulch should be removed as soon as the frost is out of the ground in the spring.

Short Farm Notes

Clover is a self-propelling, deep-running, fertilizer-distributing plow.

The combine harvester-thresher is an expensive machine, and is one of the most neglected machines so far as housing is concerned.

Bruised or off-grade tubers had better be fed to live stock at once as a means of reducing as much loss at home as possible.

Much of the wheat is mixed—hard and soft, bald and often considerable rye. Pure varieties command higher prices at the elevator.

The best time to paint is when the weather is neither too hot nor too chilly. The temperature should be between 60 and 80 degrees for best results.

Men and Homemade Bread

It is frequently said men run their homes. How about homemade bread, then, asks Ed Howe, who doesn't believe they do. "I scarcely know a man who does not want homemade bread," he adds, "and cannot get it; the bakers have persuaded the women that bakery bread is better, as barbers have persuaded them about bobbed hair. And look at the clothes the men milliners have persuaded the women to wear. . . ." Well, look at them. They are more comfortable and sanitary than men's wear. GOOD BULL BOOSTS DAIRY PRODUCTION Offers Economical Way for Dairyman to Increase Income From Cows.

Increasing the milk yield of cows is one of the surest ways for increasing dairy herd profits; and the continuous use of a good pure-bred sire has proved to be one of the most practical and most economical ways for increasing herd production, declares the Blue Valley Creamery Institute Perhaps no better example of the value and influence of better breeding can be cited than the experiment conducted by the Iowa experiment station in which a number of scrub cows having an average annual production of 4,110 pounds milk and 191 pounds butterfat, were used as the foundation for a dairy herd.

Production records of the half pure bred daughters of these scrub cows, sired by good dairy bulls of good breeding and type, show that the average yield was increased to 5,825 pounds milk and 266 pounds butterfat a year. The pronounced influence of the pure-bred sire was again brought out in the three-quarter pure bred grand-daughters of scrubs, which were daughters also of pure-bred dairy sires. The yearly production of these third generation cows, all daughters of the half pure breds, was 8.106 pounds milk and 365 pounds butterfat.

The use of a good pure-bred dairy bull in a milking herd is the most practical and most economical way for the average dairyman to increase the production of his cows and the profits from his business. Only comparatively few farmers can afford good pure-bred herds, for to purchase them is expensive. However, no farmer, who expects to make a success in the dairy business, can afford to be without the use of a good pure-bred dairy sire, the Institute states.

DAIRY FARMING MOST PROFITABLE

Wintertime Production on Increase; Production per Cow Gains.

Another good year is ahead for the men who straddle milk stools.

No branch of agriculture has shown steadier, nation-wide profits than dairying, reports the Blue Valley Creamery Institute, and practically every indication points towards the same continuous prosperity during 1929. Since the depression, the combined relative purchasing power of the butter dollar, the hog dollar and the poultry dollar has usually averaged well above pre-war figures. This means that a unit of dairy farm products has had greater purchasing power since the war than the same amount of dairy products had before the World war In other words, dairying has been just about the most profitable branch of agriculture since the war and promises to continue so during 1929.

Changes have taken place in the dairy industry, especially in progressive dairying districts, which are reflected in constantly growing profits wherever the better methods are followed. Production per cow is increasing. This increase has been most noticeable in areas where better feeding methods have replaced the old, costly method of feeding every cow alike. Lowered feed cost per 100 pounds of milk produced and in many instances increased production have followed the introduction of the simple plan of weighing out each cow's daily grain ration and weighing each cow's daily milk yield in order to feed according to the individual cow's production. Then, too, balanced production throughout the year has helped stabilize profits. So have improved sanitation methods, increased production of sweet cream, better dairy sires, etc.

An official report, for example, shows that in 1917, about 36 per cent of the year's butter was produced in the six cold months of the year. Later reports show constant increases in winter-time production year after year. The latest report shows 40 per cent production in winter.

Cream and butter prices have kept ahead of feed costs and profit margins. In Minnesota, for example, the government report shows that the profit difference between the price of butter on the New York market and the cost of feed necessary to produce a pound of butter was 18 cents in 1917 and the latest report sets the same profit difference as 23 cents.

SUCCEEDING CROPS HELPED BY ALFALFA

Larger Yields of Grain and Hoe Crops Planted After It Noted.

Alfalfa not only outyields all other farm crops but is able to make larger yields of grain and hoe crops that are planted after it, states the Blue Valley Creamery Institute To emphasize this after effect of alfalfa on farm profits the Institute points to the careful trials recently made by the New York state Experiment Station where the superior value of stubble and roots of alfalfa over the residue of timothy hay was strikingly shown in promoting the growth and production of succeeding crops.

Two-year-old fields of alfalfa and timothy, from which hay was removed each year in the usual way were plowed under and the following year planted to corn. The yield of corn fodder from these plantings was 1.5 tons per acre on the alfalfa field and 3.2 tons on the timothy field The second year these same fields were seeded to wheat which made an average yield of 51.3 bushels per acre in the field formerly occupied by alfalfa and an average of 36.1 bushels in the field that was in timothy two years before. Both fields were seeded to rye the third succeeding year, which resulted in yields of 25 bushels an acre from the one that was once an alfalfa meadow, and 22.9 bushels an acre on the other that had been in timothy.

The principal reason for the increased yields of crops following alfalfa and other legumes, which have been inoculated with certain bacteria, is due to the ability of these plants to take nitrogen from the air and incorporate it in its tissues. The grasses of which timothy is the most widely grown, do not possess this ability and therefore, remove more nitrogen from the soil than they add when their roots and stubble are plowed under. Ten thousand acres of alfalfa for every community is the aim of the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. which aims to promote greater prosperity on the average farm by diversification and intensive farming with the cow, the sow and the hen.

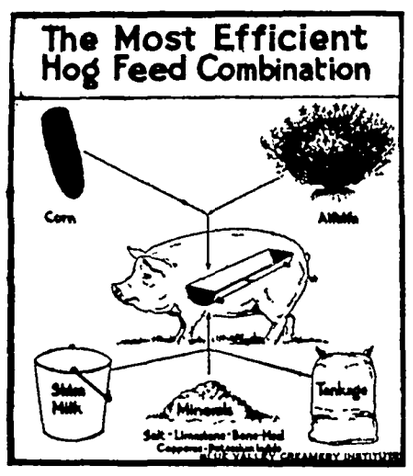
Chris Anderson and Mrs. Walter Anderson and daughter were at Hampton Wednesday to see Mrs. Anderson who is in the hospital there, and they were also business callers at Mason City.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Schaa and daughter Iona and son Seymour of Kamrar were visitors at the Peter Trampel home Wednesday. Mr. Schlaa is a brother fo Mrs. Trampel.

The two year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Bielefeld had the misfortune to get burned by a pot of hot coffee which her mother accidently over-turned on the child. The burns are causing her quite a bit of pain.

A Christmas program was given at the school in District No. 2 Friday afternoon which was attended by most of the parents and friends of the distric. After the program the presents were distributed and then a lunch was served consisting of hot coffee, doughnuts, sandwiches, cookies, ice cream and cake. Everyone had a fine time. Mrs. Rob. Roths is the teacher. They will have a week's vacation.

Mrs. J. Gruetzmacher and Mrs. P. M. Griesemer were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Schuldt at Garner on Christmas day.



HERE'S HOW TO BEAT HIGHER FEED COST

"Back Up" Corn With Other Feeds to Grow Pigs for Market Quickly.

"Backing up" corn with other feeds containing elements lacking in corn in order to grow pigs to marketable size quickly, is the one way to beat the narrower margin of profit on hogs indicated for the coming year because of higher feed costs, says the Blue Valley Creamery Institute.

For many years, says the Institute. the agricultural colleges have been working on the problem of getting the most pork out of a bushel of corn Practically every one of the thousands of hog-feeding tests that have been made show that no more efficient feeds than corn, alfalfa, skimmilk. tankage and minerals can be found. Corn alone is a poor feed for hogs because fed alone it takes a lot of corn to make a "little pork." Supplemented with plenty of skimmilk it reduces the feed cost per 100 pounds gain to a place where hogs can be profitably fed high-priced corn. A little tankage and minerals added to the ration helps make the ration even more efficient by aiding to form "protein combinations" that are hard to beat, while alfalfa, green or dried as hay, practically stands alone as an aid in supplying the food elements a hog needs under modern full-feeding methods. With corn as the basis of a ration, supplemented with skimmilk as a liquid protein supplement—with a little tankage and minerals to add variety to the protein supplement, and with alfalfa as pasture in summer and as clean, well-cured hay in winter, it will very likely be possible to produce and make a profit on hogs even if prices should drop far below present prices during the coming season.

It must be remembered that skimmilk is the cheapest and best protein supplement for growing pigs. Not only is it the most easily obtained protein on the farm, but 100 pounds of it is equal in feeding value to 25 pounds of corn and 11 pounds of tankage.

The New Year's Spirit

By ALICE B. PALMER

FOR the past six years of Tom's ten of married life he had celebrated New Year's apart from his wife. He had enjoyed what he called "the time of his life," but it had always ended up in an hilarious outburst. In each case now for six years Laurel had brought him through and had forgiven him. Yet each succeeding year it had been the same thing over again.

Now another year had rolled around and the boys at the office were joking about New Year resolutions, wild parties, etc.

As Tom got to thinking about it, he suddenly realized that he had not played fair with his wife when it came to holiday celebrations. Filled with remorse, he began to plan a "Happy New Year" for the little woman this year.

The boys joked him for being so quiet and thoughtful; but he paid no attention to them, for he was deep in thought. "What could he do to pay up for his gross neglect?" All these years she had been so true and unselfish while he had indulged in utter senseless dissipation.

"I have it," he suddenly shouted, without realizing the whole office force was looking in his direction.

"Come across—what it is, a new joke?" exclaimed Jim, the bill clerk.

"Oh no, far from it," said Tom.

"I have only just made a New Year's resolution."

Whereupon they all laughed heartily; and Joe, the sweeper, who was passing by, chuckled inwardly as he thought of the big party which was "on" that night.

The day, very suggestive of the holiday spirit, was cold and crisp; while icicles hung about in profusion and the snow, heavily packed, sparkled in the sunlight.

Tom begged to be excused an hour earlier and joyously bounded off on his New Year's escapade.

First he darted across the street and purchased two theater tickets, then to the Crystal restaurant, where he reserved a table. Next he rushed to the florist's shop (to which he had been a stranger for many years) and ordered a corsage bouquet of mixed sweet peas, her favorite flower. Then he found himself entering an exclusive women's apparel shop, just around the corner. He felt sort of wobbly in here and was just about ready to flee when a pleasant, elderly lady addressed him:

"What can I do for you, sir?"

Then he explained to her that he would like to have a complete outfit for his wife for a New Year's party.

The efficient saleslady understood perfectly, and ushered him about picking out the finery. He remembered hearing his wife speak of the new color called "Tyson blue"—that blue had been the color of her wedding gown—so he decided to have everything of that delightful shade which he knew would please her.

Finally, loaded down with bundles, he truly was a New Year's Santa Claus, or felt like one anyway, for his heart was filled with joy. "'Twas surely more blessed to give than to receive," thought Tom, as he trudged along toward home.

"Now the next move on the checkerboard," he thought, "is to get these things into the house without her knowing it."

How could he do it?

Then the thought struck him. He could get his sister, who lived around the corner, to call Laurel over by phone. So, stopping at the first available telephone booth, he did so. Then when the coast was clear he slipped into the house and was up to her room where he spread out the adorable outfit upon her snowy bed. The blue against the white spread did look beautiful, even to a man's eyes. Why had he never thought of anything like this before? Why, it was more fun than all the parties he had ever attended. You see, the true holiday spirit had hit Tom, and hit him very, very hard.

Suddenly he heard her call: "Oh Tom, is that you? Supper is ready and your favorite apple dumplings."

"Yes, dear, I am coming," he hurriedly replied, as he rushed down two steps at a time.

But as they sat eating, he noticed that she was not very hungry and wore a sad, tired expression. She, no doubt, was thinking of the usual New Year's escapade. Tom chuckled within as he thought of his glorious surprise. He was wondering how to proceed.

After praising the delicious apple dumplings, for which he only received a faint sickly smile (she was not interested in such things just now), he arose from the table and began to dress for the evening. When all ready, he kissed her goodby, and said he was going to the club. He hated to do it, for it nearly broke his heart to see her lips tremble as if about to utter a protest. But she cared too much for his happiness to interfere, so she only said:

"I hope you have a good time, Tom."

He quickly turned away and left her standing there, heartsick and weary. Other years he had not been able to comprehend; now when it dawned upon him, he felt like a brute and vowed a secret resolution with his heart alone never to leave her again.

Then he rushed around the corner to his sister and disclosed the whole beautiful secret. She was delighted and gave him a big brotherly hug and kiss. Then she said:

"Why, Tom, that is the best thing you ever did in your life."

"Yes, I know it, Dot, and I am ashamed of myself—but never again." Then he made a dash for home and the "surprise."

His wife had thrown herself upon the overstuffed davenport in despair, to await the awful midnight scene. She arose quickly, as she heard his step in the hallway. "He must have forgotten something, poor dear, or he wouldn't be back so early," thought she.

The next moment he rushed in with a loud cry of "Happy New Year, Laurel."

She could hardly believe her own ears as she gazed at him stupidly.

"Why, what's the trouble, Tom?"

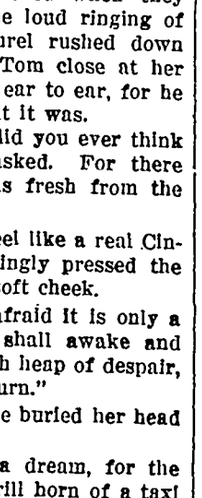
"Nothing, my dear, I only came to get you to spend New Year's Eve with me, for a change."

"How lovely, Tom, but you forgot that I have no party outfit."

"Never mind about that, just dress as quickly as you can, while I glance through the paper."

She turned from him, the tears streaming down her face, as she thought of her only available gown, an ugly gray cashmere. She could tear it into shreds, she hated it so. On the way upstairs she secretly wished that some disaster had come upon it, so that she would not be obliged to wear it.

What a revelation, as she opened the door to her room and beheld the fairy outfit spread out upon her bed. The beaded dress of Tyson blue sparkled under the electric light and the dainty satin slippers with the spider-web silk stockings were a perfect match. Then the bonnet of blue silk chiffon trimmed with tiny forget-me-nots capped the climax. She snatched it up and placed it upon her head, forgetting everything else for the moment. 'Tis strange what effect sudden happiness has upon us mortals. It goes to show that all is mental after all.



"Happy New Year"

She was a new being as she frantically called Tom in her bewilderment. He came bounding up the stairs, his eyes sparkling and his face wreathed in a smile.

"Hurry up and put it on and let's see how you look. We are going to the theater and then to the Crystal restaurant where we shall dine and dance. You are to be the Cinderella of the evening and I the happy Prince. Won't that be glorious, dear?"

As the situation began to drawn upon her consciousness, she opened her hazel eyes and her pretty rosebud mouth both at once; but the words would not come—they simply refused, so she began to tear off the old clothing and get into the new.

She had just finished when they were startled by the loud ringing of the door bell. Laurel rushed down to answer it, with Tom close at her heels grinning from ear to ear, for he knew very well what it was.

"Why Tom, how did you ever think of all this?" she asked. For there were the sweet peas fresh from the florist.

"Now I truly do feel like a real Cinderella," as she lovingly pressed the flowers against her soft cheek.

"But Tom, I am afraid it is only a dream, and that I shall awake and find myself in the ash heap of despair, waiting for your return."

With a shudder she buried her head upon his shoulder.

It was far from a dream, for the next moment the shrill horn of a taxi was calling them from without. Thus, arm in arm, they set forth for their New Year's celebration together.

They Came Home on New Year's Eve

By Jane Roth

"TOO bad the children can't come home," said Mr. Burt.

There's an auto at the gate now," replied his wife.

A stranger alighted and came to the door.

"This radio was sent to you," he said.

He installed it and left.

At the appointed hour Mr. Burt tuned in.

"Why, Pa!" cried Mrs. Burt, "it's John speaking at the banquet."

This finished, they got another station.

"Mary playin' an' Verna singin'," whispered Mrs. Burt.

"Why, Pa, now they're playin' "Home, Sweet Home," for us."

When this finished she smiled. "They came home after all, what a happy New Year."

SMUGGLERS THRIVE AGAIN IN BRITAIN

Illicit Industry Revived on Cornish Coast.

London.—Imposition of the British silk duties and the drastic reorganization and reduction of the coast guard have given rise to whispers that smuggling is on the increase along the English channel coast. No part of that coast is so difficult to guard as the wild Cornish coast, nor has any Briton in the past had so unholy a reputation for smuggling as the adventurous Cornish Celt. So whispers fly that smuggling has come back into its own, particularly in Cornwall.

The old coast guard consisted of 3,000 men, the pick of the naval service, but it has now been split into three forces, of which only one is under naval discipline. These three are: A coast-watching group of 935 men under the board of trade; an anti smuggling band of 450 men under the board of customs and excise, and a naval signaling unit of 312 men. This is the result of a shake-up that was confirmed by legislation two years ago. Either as a result of it or as a curious coincidence, rumors of smuggling have been circulating ever since the change was made.

Amateur Always Present.

Of one kind of smuggling neither the British isles nor any other country has had any lack. The amateur feminine smuggler who tucks 16 pairs of silk stockings into the toes of 16 pairs of shoes in her luggage has never been absent from British custom houses. But the professional male smuggler who works on lonely beaches by nighttime is a more difficult person both to locate and to stop.

The old coast guard came into being as an agent necessary to the combating of smuggling. It traces back to H. M. S. Ganymede, a blockade ship, which was stationed in the Downs off Deal in 1816 to close the Thames estuary to smugglers. The guard was originally confined to the Kentish coast, and its various detachments, when ashore, used to be quartered in the old Martello towers, built for coast defense in the Napoleonic wars. It was not taken over by the admiralty until 1856, by which time the organization had grown to such proportions that it covered the entire coast line. It had previously been under the customs service and had waged a long and fierce struggle against the smuggler. Havens and caves and old inns a mile or two inshore are still pointed out as the scenes of desperate struggles between smugglers and "preventives" in the old days. By the time the admiralty took over the service, however, smuggling had been beaten down to petty proportions.

The Old Coast Guard.

Under admiralty control, the coast guard formed a complete chain around the British isles, the patrolman from one station joining hands with the patrolman from the next station, at the end of what was often a long and lonely "beat." It is many years now since the paths once used by these patrols, marked out by whitewashed stones along the cliff edges, were used.

What is now called the coast guard is a life-saving service, working in direct communication with the board of trade's rocket unit and with the lifeboat group of the Royal National Lifeboat institution. The preventive service is compelled by the smallness of its forces to restrict itself in ordinary circumstances to the ports.

The result is a succession of rumors, coming now from some lonely beach in the Thames estuary, now from some smug little bay hidden in the great cliffs of Cornwall. A tale spreads concerning some lonely country house, past which a heavy lorry has been driven in the night time. Tracks, followed at dawn, lead back to a beach where the lorry waited and where footprints and the mark of a deeply laden small boat are visible.

In Cornwall, where the bays afford shelter, it is said that smuggling has become so daring that it is being carried on in daylight and sometimes even in the harbors. Much of the contraband is said to be brandy and cigars, which are deposited in the inns of the fishing villages and sold quite openly. Only in the presence of strangers is there said to be any of the secrecy usually associated with smuggling.

When customs men are on the alert in the harbors it is said to be easy to avoid them.

Was Big Enough

Pompton Lakes, N. J.—Arthur W. Holzchuh, five feet two, policeman, is under suspension because of some trouble with Police Magistrate Houman, five feet eight. After a wrangle in his court the magistrate said to the policeman: "If you don't stop that I'll throw you out." "It'll take a bigger man than you," retorted the policeman. But it didn't.

2 Per Cent in U. S. Are Ill Every Day

Omaha.—Two per cent of the population of the United States or 2,300,000 persons, are ill every day and unable to attend to their daily tasks, and a great many of them "expect a miracle to take care of their doctor bill," Dr. Earl C. Sage, secretary of the Omaha-Douglas County Medical society, declares.

TAKE A YEAR TO COOL GLASS DISK

Bureau of Standards Undertakes Big Task.

Washington.—Some time about next February scientists at the bureau of standards here will know whether they have the largest disk of optical glass ever cast in the United States.

During the war, when European sources were closed, the bureau began to make optical glass. Last May these experiments reached a climax with the casting of a disk of glass 70 inches in diameter and 12½ inches thick. This is the largest disk that has ever been cast in the United States and one of the largest in the world.

But such a disk is not finished when it is cast. Glass conducts heat very poorly. It is very hot when cast, for then it is in a molten condition. If simply exposed to the air as soon as it begins to harden the outside would cool much more quickly than the interior. In doing so it would shrink, and the result would be that the disk would soon be merely a pile of small pieces of broken glass. Even if cooled more slowly strains might be set up in the disk that would cause it to crack as soon as efforts were made to grind it into the dish shape of a reflecting telescope mirror.

Accordingly, it is necessary to extend the cooling period over many months. In making such a big disk it is carefully incased in sand and fire clay, so that it takes nearly a year to cool. This is called annealing. By February, 1928, the 70-inch disk at the bureau will have cooled sufficiently for the scientists to uncover it. Then they will know whether they have a disk or some pieces of broken glass.

Annealing is not always successful. The largest disk that has ever been cast, from which the 100-inch mirror of the big reflecting telescope at the Mount Wilson observatory was made, was completed only after a number of attempts. This was made at St. Gobain, France, where, before the war, the principal factory for large disks was located. Time after time disks were cast, only to find months later that they had cracked in annealing. Even the one finally used was not perfect, as it was cast in three layers and when completed showed two layers of bubbles, like the filling in a layer cake. So it may be that the American optical glass workers will find in a few months that they have to try again.

Nevada Leads All in Per Capita Wealth

New York.—Nevada, with less than 80,000 inhabitants, had a greater share of wealth in proportion to its population than any other state in the Union, according to a computation made by the National Industrial Conference board on the basis of 1925 estimates.

Although the total wealth of Nevada is only $565,000,000, less than that of any other state, its per capita share is $7,209.

New York state, harboring one-tenth of the population of the United States with a total wealth of $40,108,000,000 or nearly one-eighth of the total for the nation, ranks fourteenth in per capita wealth, which for 1925 is estimated at $3,593.

Mining and agricultural states in the Far West, Northwest and Middle West show the greatest per capita wealth, Nevada, Wyoming, South Dakota, Iowa, Oregon, Nebraska, California and North Dakota ranking highest in the order given.

The great industrial states show the largest total shares in the national wealth, but none of them shows a per capita figure high enough to be included within the first eight states.

The per capita wealth of some states is as follows: Connecticut, $3,842; New Jersey, $3,691; Massachusetts, $3,546; Pennsylvania, $3,389; Illinois, $3,386; Ohio, $3,233; West Virginia, $3,211; Indiana, $3,145; Michigan, $3,031, and Kentucky, $1,566.

600 Cups of Coffee a Year for Each Swede

Stockholm.—Six hundred cups of coffee a year a person is the average consumption in Sweden, according to John J. Thadeu, managing director of the Brazilian coffee exporting firm of J. Aron & Co., Inc., of Santos, who visited Stockholm recently.

Thadeu also states that in no other country in the world is the discrimination in the taste of coffee as high as in Sweden. Coffee merchants in Brazil are particularly careful with the inspection of coffee destined for consumption in Sweden.

The secretary of the Swedish government social bureau in Stockholm, Hugo Heyman, admits that coffee plays as significant a role on the Swedish trade balance as grain, comprising 20 per cent of the whole import of food, liquors and tobacco.

Birds Warn Fellows Against Deadly Wires

London.—British birds have set up their own police force to protect feathered tribes against deadly high-power wires.

Electrical engineers find bird casualties are growing fewer all the time and credited it to the caution with which birds now approach all wires. In some places engineers even maintain they have seen bird guards warning their associates against dangerous lines.

The Happiest New Year

By FRANCES MORGAN

NEW YEAR'S EVE — and home earlier than usual. Miriam had stopped at the office. Her letter troubled her. It was from Jere and its single line read:

"Look for me New Year's Eve. Love.—Jere."

Miriam now realized how different was Jere from the new friends — different in every way. Even his shoes, she recalled, in the old days were mud-caked, his corduroy coat snagged and briar-covered.

Mrs. Dalton, at her husband's death, had removed from Oak Hill their farm, to Middlesboro and the cosy bungalow on Maple street. Miriam had secured a place at the "Palace," Middlesboro's single department store; soon she was the most popular girl there. She liked her new friends immensely—yet, at first the smiling, tanned face of Jere Mallory, her schoolmate at the little country school, refused to be forgotten.

Jere had driven them from Oak Hill to Middlesboro. "You've always been my sweetheart, Miriam, even when a tiny girl," he'd whispered; "in another year I finish at the agricultural college, then I'm coming back for you."

In Middlesboro Miriam found lots of good times; the young folk took her—her brown eyes and soft, bronze curls—straight to their hearts. The green bungalow soon was the scene of much merriment.

Good looking and suave, Jack Barrington of tener than any one else "dated up" with Miriam. Jack rushed the new girls and, because his father's business was very good (the "Palace" was the center of trade for the county) and Jack an indulged, only child, the girl he chose to favor was considered lucky.

* * * * * * *

New Year's Eve. Twelve months had sped since the green bungalow first had known the Daltons.

Hanging up her coat, Miriam turned toward the kitchen, where her mother bustled over the range. "Mums, I've a letter from Jere—he's coming tonight—he—" she tried to stammer that Jere loved her and wanted an answer.

Yet it was of Jack that Miriam was thinking.

"Mums, I've a date tonight with Jack! What shall I do! Jack's temper is dreadful. When he likes a girl he makes a scene if she looks at some one else."

"Selfish pig!" Mrs. Dalton put down the bread basket with a thump.

But Miriam was thinking how impossible it would be to give up Jack—Jack, so typical of all she loved—

* * * * * * *

Jack was in high good humor. He displayed his new overcoat, asking for her opinion (he seemed well enough pleased, himself, for his glance frequently strayed to the mirror) Miriam praised its cut and weave, yet her ears were strained for the crunch of snow outside.

Ah, there it was! A lusty stamping of boots—Mrs. Dalton's cordial words bidding Jere welcome. At the sound of a masculine voice, Jack's face showed surprise and displeasure.

"It's Jere, my—our old friend!" Miriam explained; "he's come to spend New Year's."

"But your date's with me, rasped Jack, glowering at Jere who stood, smiling, in the doorway, an arm affectionately about Mrs. Dalton.

"Yes, Jack dear, but Jere 's our oldest friend—besides he's had this date for a whole year!" Saying this Miriam's smile broke through the mist that blurred her eyes.

"Oh, so that's the game? That being the case—" Jack arose and majestically stalked toward the door which Mrs. Dalton tactfully held open.

It was all rather absurd, of course—and Jere's jolly laugh echoed throughout the bungalow, Mrs. Dalton's merry voice joined in; then Miriam's. Now that it was over it all resembled a "movie" comedy. Still smiling, Mrs. Dalton went in search of the plate of fairy-light "Sally Lunn" baked especially for Jere. She carefully closed the door.

Jere turned and held wide his arms. "Happy New Year, little girl!"—how tenderly he spoke—and what could Miriam do but nestle her bronze curls near his heart?

"Oh, my dear!" the words were a joyful lilt, "the happiest New Year to you, Jere!"

CHAPTER I

—1—

He did not know whether to be more amused or irritated at her temerity, not to say impudence, in keeping him waiting. He glanced at his wrist watch. Ten minutes past the time for their rendezvous and he had been here five minutes ahead of time. Waiting fifteen minutes—for a common little Pennsylvania Dutch girl! Really, she must be taught better. He would have to give her a lesson.

Hitherto it had been he who had kept her waiting here at their trysting place. Deliberately. To keep her in her place. Lest she get it into her head that he wanted to marry her! Any girl might expect anything these days—all social barriers falling, no lines drawn—

She was not, as yet, spoiled. She had never presumed to resent his keeping her waiting. Regarded him with awe. Demure little thing she was—

He considered how he should impress upon her the seriousness of the fact that she had displeased him. Go home and not be here when she did finally get here after walking three miles to meet him? No, he couldn't be quite so ruthless as that. Anyway, she would just think he had failed to keep their rendezvous and would not know he had been here and had gone away again.

Leave a note pinned to the tree? Not safe. Even if he did not sign his name. Commit yourself to writing and you're apt to have a lawsuit for damages or "heart balm" on your hands. Above all things he must avoid a scandal—just now especially—on the eve of becoming engaged—

Well, one thing was certain, she must not know he had been so eager as to have gotten here ages ahead of her and so forbearing as to have waited all this time. He'd hide and not appear until after she arrived.

Picking his way to avoid mud, he descended the hill on the slope opposite the one she would ascend.

He found himself surprised that he should be taking all this trouble for a little country girl. Unprecedented in his experience. Never, even for one of his own class, had he put himself out and he was nothing if not a stickler for "class" in these days of falling barriers. First time in his life he had ever been so lured by a girl of low breeding. A Pennsylvania Dutch farmer's daughter who talked the lingo—heavens! How on earth was it that he, usually too pernickety-nice, he admitted it, found the vulgar little thing so irresistible?

Ah, but the fact was she wasn't vulgar, really; only unsophisticated. If she were inherently vulgar, the gum-chewing type, he would not be here. No, not for all the seduction of that white throat so tantalizingly exposed when she bent back her head and laughed; and that unutterable sweetness of her lips; and the dazzling whiteness and evenness of her teeth; and that musical little gurgle when anything amused her. (And such unexpected things did amuse her, like his correcting her English and her manners.)

She puzzled him a little; had from the first; he did not "get" her exactly; something there was about her—it could not be subtlety, she was too simple. But he vaguely sensed that she was not quite so simple as she seemed; vaguely distrusted her; she did, sometimes, with an innocence that was almost suspiciously stupid, say such pointed things; things that did prick beneath the skin a little.

Youthfully priding himself upon his extreme modernism, and upon being a disciple of French decadent critics of art and life, he believed that he, in common with all the new generation who did any thinking, had rejected all religion. But the truth was that in the face of the wreckage of faiths all over the landscape, he did most tenaciously and devoutly cling to the faith of his fathers—their deeply religious faith in the respectability of the Creighton family and its divine right to special prerogatives—the prerogatives naturally inherent in owners of anthracite coal mines.

St. Croix Creighton was glad that he looked much more like a man of letters than a man of business. He cultivated that "literary" look he thought he had; and he did have a good deal to go on—clear-cut features, cold, thoughtful eyes, a rather Byronic head.

Had he not been so well placed in life as always to command consideration, he would hardly have "got by" so smoothly as he did with his little assumptions of superiority and his little affectations. But as no one of his world had ever had the temerity to consider him ridiculous, he did not know he was. To be sure, there was his elder brother, Marvin, who sometimes waxed sarcastic at his expense—but Marvin, in the judgment of his own class, was not a person to be taken seriously, for the obvious reason that he did not take himself nor his great position in the world nor yet the Creighton family itself seriously.

All this is, however, digressing—we have left our young gentleman standing uncomfortably and perilously on the muddy slope of a hill, taking in the view.

His gaze sought out in the distance the red brick farmhouse set down in the midst of Sam Schwenckton's prosperous acres—the home of the girl for whom he waited; its ugliness softened by distance. Did she, he wondered, feel its ugliness? He had tried once to rouse her to some enthusiasm over this wonderful view from the hilltop and all he had been able to elicit from her had been, "The vee-you? Yes, it's nice." A "nice" view! So of course, far from feeling the ugliness of her father's farmhouse, she was probably proud of its fresh paint and generally well-to-do aspect.

From where he stood St. Croix could plainly see, five miles to the right of the Schwencktons' farm, his own home, rising from a hilltop, overlooking a wide area: the imposing estate, "Beechlands," that for two generations had been the home of the powerful Creighton family, visible from all points of the compass for many miles. And in the valley at the foot of their hill clustered the monotonous rows of ugly little houses in which the men and children lived who worked in the Creighton coal mines, creating the wealth which maintained the mansion on the hilltop, and at the same time, under a wise and beneficent Providence, earning their own subsistence, however bare and joyless—such was Nature's divinely ordained plan, the Creightons had always reverently and devoutly believed, and no religious believers had ever lived up to a creed more faithfully and consistently.

St. Croix Creighton Was Glad That He Looked Much More a Man of Letters Than a Man of Business.

Our young heir to the great Creighton estate, as he started on his way back to the appointed meeting place, decided that if Meely (that was her silly name—"Meely") were not there this time he would certainly go home.

"And," he told himself as he lit a cigarette and began his second ascent of the hill, "if I do go home without seeing her, she'll surely pay the piper! —if I don't decide to drop her altogether!"

He had an uneasy suspicion that this latter course would not hurt her nearly so much as it would fret him—though it had been she that had made the first advances in their intimacy; at a barn dance in the neighborhood of his home; outraging the rural conventions in her determination to attract his attention by boldly executing a dance solo down the length of the barn, stopping before him with a deep curtsey and holding out her lovely arms in invitation—after which he had danced with no one else during the remainder of the evening.

She had tried that evening to pin him down to a date for their next meeting, but though he had fully intended to meet her again, he had kept her in suspense; not only for that evening, but for two weeks following. Uncertainty—that was the weapon for winning and holding a girl.

He had confidently expected her to try to seek him out. But when a whole week had passed without a sign from her, he had begun to grow restless. Each succeeding day and night that he waited grew longer, intolerably longer, and he had finally realized, with an ironical amusement at his own expense, that all the "uncertainty" he had meant to inflict upon her, he himself was enduring with a poignancy that astonished and angered him. A little hussy like that, a peasant girl, play fast and loose with him, causing him sleepless nights, hungry yearnings to see her again and hold her, fresh and fragrant young beauty that she was, in his arms again, as he had ecstatically done at the barn dance!

But the trouble had been that he did not know where she lived nor even her name. So sure had he been that he would hear from her in a day or two that he had not taken the trouble to ascertain these unimportant facts about her.

It had been only when, quite beaten, he had been about to give in and try to discover her that he had received from her a funny, crude little note. What sport he had at his club showing it around for the enjoyment of his fellow club members!

"Since you are the only Gentleman Frend I got that's a purfect Gentleman in whom I feel I know well enought to ask for such a favur, dear, I am asking you, now, to keep company with me and be my Steady Date."

That was a month ago and he had been seeing her several times a week, furtively, ever since; his "ridiculous infatuation," as he scornfully called it to himself, growing more irresistible with each meeting.

As he reached the top of the hill he was greatly relieved (and thrilled) to see her sitting there under the tree which was their appointed meeting place.

At sight of him she threw away the apple she had been eating with greedy abandon, drew the back of her hand across her mouth and hastily rose.

His peculiar sort of egotism derived an almost sensual pleasure from this girl's worshipful bearing toward him, from her timid admiration of everything about him, which she so helplessly betrayed—of his modish clothes, his finely shaped white hands, his cultivated speech, even his faintly supercilious and autocratic attitude toward herself.

She came toward him, just now, shyly, rubbing her soiled right hand on her hip before offering it to him.

But he waved it off, and resisting, with a strong self-restraint, the tenderness as well as the desire to which she powerfully moved him, he looked down upon her severely as she stood before him.

"Go and sit down again."

She obeyed him like a child, her soft brown eyes fixed upon his face with a doglike anxious uncertainty that acted on his passion for dominance like a titillating stimulant.

She wore a cheap, dressy frock of blue voile trimmed with tawdry white lace, a bunch of artificial flowers on one shoulder, streamers of flimsy blue ribbon at the waist.

He frowned at the slovenly way she sat and she quickly straightened up, pulled her skirt over her knees and tried to look prim.

Spreading his handkerchief on a flat rock a few feet in front of her, he sat down, clasped his shapely hands about his knees and silently, disapprovingly, inspected her. She became uneasy, making a timid, tentative movement to come closer to him, evidently as eager as he was (though less controlled) to begin their "petting party," as she most vulgarly called it. But again he waved her on.

"Not yet," he said curtly. He always held her off in suspense like this for a little while, partly to impress her with a proper sense of her inferiority, partly to prolong the stimulating contemplation of her charms and of her subservience, so that when he did presently permit her to come to him, the nearness of her beauty would be all the more thrilling

She relaxed against the tree, her pretty head drooping, an adorably childish pout on her red lips. "I'm sure I don't know what I done!" she said in an injured tone, on the verge of tears.

"Did. Say did."

"What I've did," she meekly repeated.

"Oh!" he sighed, "you hopeless child! Didn't they teach you any English grammar at the district school down there?"—with an inclination of his head toward the valley.

"Well, you see, till I was twelf years old a'ready, Pop he wouldn't do it to leave me go to school no more. So I ain't just so good educated that way, like you, Mr. Creighton. You're got an awful nice education—ain't you have? And," she added, drawing a deep breath, "you become your clo'es so! Ach!" She was given to lumping unrelated facts in this way.

"Star-Spangled Banner" Finished in Rowboat

The last lines of "The Star-Spangled Banner" were written in a rowboat by Francis Scott Key and were not penned in the hold of a prison ship as the old school books taught.

Legendary history was that Key was a prisoner of war while watching the British bombardment of Baltimore and Fort McHenry during the war of 1812. The correct story has been brought to light by the Woman's Home Companion, which shows that Key was permitted to go to the British flagship under a truce signal to obtain the release of a friend who had been taken prisoner, and arrived just as the enemy was ready to open fire.

The young poet developed his verses during the anxiety of the night, but it was while returning to shore in a small boat the following morning that he wrote exultantly "'Tis the Star-Spangled Banner. Oh! long may it wave o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

Got Through, All Right

Recently there visited in this city a genuine old Georgia "cracker" from the outlying piney woods section of that state. While here he attended for the first time in his life an Episcopal church service. Later he remarked to a friend:

"It was all as interestin' as a 'possum hunt. I never did know much o' what all the folks about me was a-doin', but I jest kept my wits about me an' fell an' riz with 'em every time."—Boston Globe.

GLITTERING EVENING GOWNS; FUR-TRIMMED CLOTH COATS

IN THIS sophisticated age, a beaded gown, in order to be admitted into "society," simply must achieve the highest note in sartorial artistry it is a story of the "survival of the fittest"—meaning that the ordinary beaded frock has vanished from the style picture.

Between the exquisitely worked patrician beaded types which add such glittering beauty to the scene of present midwinter functions and the tawdry machine-made beaded specimens which once upon a time tempted the "popular" trade, it would be difficult to trace relationship.

Concerning the newer beaded gowns which are so modish for dinner and dance—they are interpretative of all that is most exquisite in the art of dress design. Paris stylists, especially are creating beguiling modes stressing elongated lines which have a wonderfully slenderizing effect. From the house of Worth comes an adorable gown the long black satin bodice of which is covered with parallel lines of tiny jade beads, which travel from shoulder to hipline, the skirt portion being achieved with tiers of black chiffon which cascades to jagged points at the hemline. As if to impress one with the importance of beads in the mode, the shoulder flower worn with this delectable Paris frock is itself made entirely of little white beads. Which reminds one it is the "last word" in fashion to wear colorful little bead boutonnieres on one's fur collar or coat lapel, for either daytime or evening.

To the modern beaded gown perhaps no item contributes so generous a share of grace and beauty as does beaded fringe. The picture shows the fascination of dainty beaded fringe when arranged in tiers upon the skirt The bodice in its elaborately worked beaded design contrasts effectively to the skirt whose fringed tiers bespeak such elegance of simplicity. This lovely gown is carried out in tones of palest orchid. The necklace worn with this frock is worthy of mention because it stresses the new trend for costume jewelry set with huge twin amethysts, sapphires and other heirloom effects.

Returning to the theme of beaded fringe, a white satin frock trimmed with rows of fringe made of crystal beads is lovely, especially if a delicate tracery of the beads in the form of, say, a vine or a wreath motif be repeated at neckline and about the sleeveless armhole.

Concerning the fur trimmings which so lavishly adorn the smartest of the midwinter cloth coats, one is minded of the thought that "one cannot have too much of a good thing."

Trimmed With Bead Fringe.

Of these stunning coats which display so little of cloth and so much of fur, one cannot truthfully say that they are a fifty-fifty proposition. The impression is rather that of three-quarters fur to one-quarter cloth, or some such proportion. But why try to solve the handsomeness of the modern fur-trimmed cloth coat by mathematical calculation? Be the ratio of fur to cloth what it may, one can see by the attractive models in this picture that stylists have grown quite reckless when it comes to the hugeness of fur collars, the wideness of fur cuffs and the depth of fur borderings.

It is the long haired light furs which are outstanding this season. White fox on black cloth, tawny badger on tweed or on wine-colored dark green or chesnut brown woolens, lynx, fox, wolf matched to the cloth they trim or sharply contrasting it, thus does fancy run this season.

Two distinctive style points are emphasized in the fur trimming on the coat to the left. One is the animal scarf collar, the other, cuffs with points which reach almost to the elbow. The border on this coat, too, is unique in that it finishes with an animal head at the side front.

Two Beautiful Coats.

Shawl collars such as grace the model to the right are very popular. Quite a few new cloth coats carry enormous shawl collars without any fur whatever on the sleeves or around the bottom.

Tweed suits, whose coats show conspicuous fur collars and cuffs are among the chic sports fashions of the hour. In every case the fur is ostensibly made a feature in that it commands attention because of its color, quality and general attractiveness.

Horticultural News

PRUNING IS VERY NECESSARY WORK

Instead of being satisfied with a shabby neglected orchard producing mostly scabby wormy fruit which cannot be relished by the family nor sold to advantage, the farmer can manage his orchard so that his home will be abundantly supplied with clean, sound, wholesome fruit from September until late spring and in addition the surplus will find a market at fair prices.

To accomplish these results it becomes necessary that the farmer adopt the orchard practices in use by successful orchardists.

Pruning is necessary as a means of reducing the number of cull fruits in the crop. This is accomplished partly by removing many of the badly shaded and crowded branches making very little growth. This kind of wood cannot bear large apples. Most of the large apples grow on strong growing branches which have abundant access to light and air. Ordinarily, bearing trees are apt to become dense in the upper parts of the tree, thus shading all branches below it. This must be regulated by opening the top of the tree. Remove upright parts of branches at a place where another part of the branch grows to the outside of the tree. Attend your local pruning demonstrations and learn how to prune for better size and color of fruit.

Trees must be fertilized regularly if best results are to be obtained. On the average farm, stable manure is available and should be used for orchard fertilization. If it is not applied in the fall of the year chances are that the work is delayed until winter or spring and no application made.

Mulch for Strawberries Gives Good Protection

A mulch for strawberries is desirable in nearly all sections. Strawberries are very shallow-rooted and much damage from alternate freezing and thawing is likely to result unless there is a protective covering. Mulching is also desirable because it saves soil moisture, prevents the soil from baking and aids in weed control. In the spring it tends to keep berries clean and to make picking easier, says Successful Farming.

Straw and hay are the most common mulching materials, though cornstalks, pine needles and strawy manure are sometimes used. The material should be cheap, not easily shifted by winds and free from weed seeds.

The time of application will vary with the climate. In colder sections it is desirable to wait until the ground is well frozen. In sections where winters are mild and many fall freezes occur it is best not to wait until severe weather occurs. Uniform mulching is desirable but when material is scarce the area over the plants should receive first attention. A rather light mulching will be ample since the mulch need only prevent abrupt changes.

Woolly Aphis Injurious to Young Apple Trees

Woolly aphis attacks young apple trees both on the roots underground and on the branches and twigs above ground. Above ground it is easy to control the insect by spraying with nicotine sulphate 1 part to 800 parts of water. High pressure should be used in order to drive the material into the woolly masses. The material must be brought into contact with the insects' bodies if it is to kill them.

It is not an easy matter to destroy the insects beneath the ground. Some persons report they have controlled the insect by digging away the earth for several inches, then distributing tobacco dust over the roots and covering with soil. Others have reported success from injecting carbon bisulphide in holes punched in the ground about the trees and then filling the holes. The bisulphide is quite volatile, and the fumes in spreading through the soil kill the insects as they are reached. Since the material is quite inflammable, one should not smoke when applying it.

Planting a Windbreak

Do not plant windbreaks too close to the buildings. The ideal way is to have space for the garden and small fruit plantation between it and the house. Where space is limited, of course, conditions will determine otherwise sometimes, but about 300 feet from the buildings is about right. A temporary windbreak of soft maple or golden willow would live long enough so that in the meantime the evergreens would grow and get a fair start.

Trimming Trees

In trimming trees, it should be remembered there are two kinds of cells, fruit and wood cells. One kind of cell will predominate at the expense of the other. If you are planning to grow fruit, eliminate the wood cells, or if you are developing the tree, eliminate the fruit cells. Branches larger than a 50-cent piece that are cut should be covered with paint to fill up the wound. Where trees have a weakness on one side, careful pruning will make it shape up
